Confidence Gains, Labor Heads Find

Production Restrictions Peril Revival, Warn Manufacturers.

By Felix Bruner.

Optimistic business reports came yesterday from such widely divergent sources as the American Federation of Labor and the Federal Reserve Board.

The federation saw increasing business confidence, which it predicted will result in a boom. The board announced industrial activity and employment in the first ten months of the year have been at level higher than at any time in the four preceding years.

Simultaneously, the National Association of Manufacturers issued a committee report opposing production restrictions, either in industry or agriculture, as obstructions to recovery and recommending vigorous opposition to any new attempt of the Federal Government to regulate industrial wages and hours.

This report, together with the results of the poll taken by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, to be made public tomorrow, are taken to indicate that the majority of American business feels it is sufficiently far along the road to recovery that not further Government assistance is needed or desired.

Regains Confidence.

"With this fall's industrial upturn, business has regained a greater measure of confidence than at any other time since the depression began," the American Federation of Labor said.

"There is good basis for business confidence," the statement continued. "The upturn this fall has reached a higher level than anticipated. Standard Statistics' estimate of industrial production for November, first set at 74.8 per cent of normal, has been revised upward to 77.1 per cent. This is the highest November since 1929, and 14 per cent above November last year.

"Industrial production, retail trade, building construction have all advanced; farmers' incomes are higher. Business failures have been at unusually low levels for two years. These favorable factors have been reflected in a rising stock market which has continued steadily upward since October, carrying stocks to new 1935 peaks."

The federation said that more businesses today are able to operate profitably than at any time during the last few years. One of the reasons given for the upturn in business is the shortage developed during the depression. The federation estimated the country needs 9,000,000 new automobiles and 5,000,000 new homes. Replacement of automobiles this year, it is said, has resulted in a 45 per cent increase in profits, and 8.3 per cent increase in employment and an 18.5 per cent increase in pay rolls.

Many Still Jobless.

An increase in employment in proportion to the increase in business is, however, not foreseen by the federation, which estimated that since 1929 each worker's producing power had increased 25 per cent. This fact was used as an argument for shortening hours in industry. Wages, the federation said, are not keeping pace with production. It estimated that production has increased 8.7 per cent this year, while the buying power of workers has increased only 1 per cent.

The Reserve Board said:

"Industrial activity and employment in the first ten months of the year have been at a level higher than in any of the four preceding years and about half way between the lowest point of the depression and the 1929 level.

"The volume of unemployment

Ellsworth, Aid Still Missing; Search Ready

Radio Silent for 25 Hours on Air Dash Over Antarctic.

By the United Press.

New York, Nov. 24.—Lincoln Ellsworth and his pilot, in the airplane Polar Star, at 6:30 p. m. E. S. T., today had not been heard from for 25 hours, and the explorer's supply ship Wyatt Earp was preparing to launch a search of the Antarctic wastes unless radio communication is re-established with Ellsworth soon, the New York Times said tonight.

The Times received a radio message from the Wyatt Earp which said no grave fears were held for Ellsworth's safety, as the silence may be due only to defective radio equipment, but that bases would be established and a search begun soon if no word was received from the explorer and Herbert Hollick-Kenyon, his pilot.

The mother ship of the expedition was near Dundee Island tonight. The last message the ship received from Ellsworth placed his position far over an unknown section of the Antarctic and said all was well.

Took Off Saturday.

Ellsworth took off from Dundee Island at 3:03 a. m. Saturday in the direction of the Bay of Whales, Ross Sea, the site of Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd's former base. The weather was believed fair, with the temperature around 6 degrees below zero. Their plane was functioning well when the last radio message, badly jumbled, was received.

The message, sent from a position calculated to be latitude 76 south and longitude 79 west, read:

"All well. I estimate that we are at seven (jumbled words) or thereabouts. My guess is a (jumbled words) as that (jumbled) still clear (jumbled) at that (jumbled) country (many jumbled words). Little or no wind."

Since then the fliers' radio has been strangely silent.

Fell Into Crevasse.

Ellsworth's attempts to conquer the Antarctic have been singularly unfortunate. In 1933 he escaped a frozen grave by a narrow margin when his plane fell into a crevasse in the Bay of Wales in the Ross Sea. Last year bad weather defeated a similar attempt to fly over the bottom of the world, forcing him back to his base.

He left on the present expedition from Montevideo October 18, bound on his ship, the Wyatt Earp, for the Weddell Sea. He reached his base at Dundee Island November 12.

He was attempting the first crossing of the Antarctic continent by air, his destination being Byrd's former base on the Bay of Whales, 17 hours distant. He had 20 hours' supply of gasoline and eight weeks' of food.

Before he took off Ellsworth arranged with Walter Lanz, wireless operator on the Wyatt Earp, to send messages at stated intervals over an emergency wireless set, in case he lands.

One of the last messages received from him stated that the pipe he was smoking was going well "but it takes a lot of breath at this altitude to get it going."

Budget Slash To Be Sought By Buchanan

House Leader Predicts Drastic Cuts After Roosevelt Talk.

By the United Press.

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 24.—A general reduction in the budget "all along the line" will be demanded by Chairman James P. Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, he revealed today after a conference with President Roosevelt at the Little White House.

Buchanan's discussion with Mr. Roosevelt was the forerunner to another tomorrow when they will examine governmental requirements for the next fiscal year.

"I'm out to balance the budget just as soon as possible," Buchanan remarked, adding:

"I think the new budget can be brought within $500,000,000 of balance."

"How are you going about it?" he was asked.

"By having the devil of a fight," he declared.

Further than that the chairman would not go as to the make-up of the budget, explaining "we did not get down to specific figures."

Tomorrow's session at the little White House also will see Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director, in the picture. He is due here in the morning with figures involving costs of three departments, including the Navy.

There was the belief that if all goes well, the President will be able to get the budget pretty well in shape, although open for last-minute changes. This is particularly true as regards the emergency situation which changes weekly along with broad national economic developments.

Buchanan went to the Roosevelt

Brazil Moves To Put Down Army Revolt

Communists Aid Soldier Rebels; Natal Is Taken by Revolutionists.

By the Associated Press.

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 24.—The Brazilian government, it was officially announced late tonight, has ordered troops, naval units and army planes rushed to the northeastern part of the nation to suppress a revolt assertedly aided by Communists.

The soldiers of the Twenty-first Battalion of Chasseurs at Natal, capital of the State of Rio Grande Do Norte, have revolted and taken possession of the city, imprisoning their officers, it was announced.

A statement by Capt. Flinto Muller, chief of police, after a conference with the ministers of justice and interior said part of the Twenty-ninth Battalion of Chasseurs at Recife, Pernambuco, had similarly attempted a revolt assisted by Communists but had been defeated by loyal troops.

Troops Rushed.

Troops are being rushed from neighboring states, it was said, to repress the revolt with "energetic measures."

Gen. Joao Gomez, minister of war, ordered a plane prepared to take him to Recife tomorrow.

The Pernambuco revolutionists also seized the City of Olinda, but were defeated, the statement said.

Commercial airlines changed their schedules to give the two states a wide berth. Unconfirmed reports said there were uprisings in the states of Alagoas and Parahyba, also.

Informed observers said the revolt, if unchecked, might conceivably develop into a Socialist-Anti-Imperialist movement, suspected of forming for several months. Fears were expressed that such a development would embrace the entire nation.

The more persistent reports centered the disorders in the states of Rio Grande Do Norte and Alagoas. Commercial airlines altered their schedules along the north Brazilian coast.

Reports Unverified.

The newspaper, Carreio Da Manha, carried unverified reports of "grave events" in the two states and said the police, army and navy forces were prepared to act.

Radio advices from Pernambuco, center of communications in the northeast, led to orders which sent the northbound Pan-American plane from the Cape Branco area to northern Rio Grande Do Norte without a scheduled landing at Natal.

The same advices cautioned the German syndicate Condor plane against making its scheduled station at Natal and an authenticated report here said a second Condor plane, now at Natal, was unable to take off on schedule.

Child Overlooked, Dies In Crib as Home Burns

Nahant, Mass., Nov. 24 (AP).—When fire raged through his home early today, George White gathered his wife and four children around him and, he thought, led all of them to safety. But, outside, they learned "Peggy," two and a half, was missing.

As the flames were brought under control, firemen found her. The little girl had gone back to her crib, curled up far down under the blankets and suffocated. The home was destroyed.

London Joins Paris to Delay Oil Embargo

The War Situation.

A Franco-British agreement was reported reached to recommend postponement of League of Nations' action on an oil embargo against Italy.

Officials at Addis Ababa put Italian losses on the northern front at 4,700 killed in the last fortnight.

Ras Desta Demtu, commander of Ethiopia's southwestern armies, is reported to have inflicted a severe defeat upon a force of 2,000 Italians, killing hundreds.

Italian Gen. Ruggiero Santini ordered a drastic "mopping up" campaign to prevent union of two powerful Ethiopian units.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 24.—Authoritative sources said tonight that Great Britain has agreed to a postponement of a meeting of the League of Nations sanctions committee, scheduled Friday, at the request of Premier Laval of France.

Laval told Sir George Russell Clerk, British ambassador, that the internal situation of France was such at present that he would be unable to leave Paris and would appreciate a postponement, it was reported.

The request was referred to the British government, which decided it was a "reasonable one," these sources said.

Geneva Is Stirred.

Geneva, Nov. 24 (AP).—A semiofficial statement that Great Britain and France had agreed to recommend postponement of Friday's League of Nations sanctions committee to discuss an oil embargo against Italy stirred Geneva to [illegible].

One reaction to the news was that Great Britain, which heretofore has been a strong proponent of the oil sanction, may see more hope on the horizon for peace negotiations between Italy and Ethiopia.

The advices from Paris, which followed a meeting between Premier Pierre Laval and Sir Russell Clerk, the British ambassador, gave no indicaton of progress toward peace, however.

Prior to the report, some League officials had expressed the opinion the sanctions committee would pick an early date for the embargo in an effort to bring quick cessation of hostilities in Africa.

The Paris decision was explained as a move to avoid dangerous aggravation of the existing political tension with Italy.

Laval Receives Protest.

It was known that Vittorio Cerruti, the Italian ambassador to France, recently made strong representations against the proposed embargo to M. Laval.

Earlier, one member of the sanctions committee of 18, which meets Friday, said:

"If we do not intend to fix the date, why call a meeting? Our committee is empowered to propose a date for the embargo on oil, coal, iron and steel if it believes the conditions are such as to make the embargo effective."

The main reason given for extension of the embargo to oil and perhaps other "key products" was the belief that the present economic boycott of Italy will not end the Ethiopian war quickly enough.

Some leaders were convinced a

Tientsin Fight Flares After Sector in Hopei Is Decreed Free State

U. S. Apprehensive at Split Reported in North China State

State Department Awaits Official Advices of Autonomy Move; Action May Lead to International Complications.

By the Associated Press.

State Department officials received with an interest approaching real concern yesterday reports that an autonomous government had been proclaimed in eastern Hopei Province in North China.

None would comment publicly, however. It was said there would be no opportunity until today for study of official advices from the American Ambassador to China.

Nevertheless, it was known the Government has viewed with some apprehension the recent autonomy move in North China, which generally was interpreted here as intended to extend the Japanese sphere of influence south of China's Great Wall.

Actual crystallization of the movement in the form of yesterday's announcement that the demilitarized zone in East Hopei formally had been proclaimed a separate, autonomous province seemed certain to be regarded with increased misgivings.

Far Eastern news dispatches indicated that Peiping, where the American embassy is located, and Tientsin, important North China port where many American interests are centered, were not immediately and directly affected.

Tokyo reports, however, that the new autonomy council planned to take over the National Railway in the demilitarized zone appeared, in the view of some observers, to obtain elements of possible international complications.

American troops, as well as soldiers of other world powers, are stationed at Tientsin to guard the railroad from Peiping to the sea. What effect the change in governments might have on that situation remained a matter for speculation.

The demilitarized zone embraces the territory in East Hopei Province between the Great Wall and a line north of Peiping and Tientsin. If these boundaries mark the full extent of the new autonomous province, those two cities would not be included.

The Great Wall separates Hopei and Jehol Province which came under Japanese control in 1933

Tientsin (Monday), Nov. 25.—Serious disturbances broke out in Tientsin today and autonomist agitators seized several municipal buildings.

The agitators, who called themselves the "Hopei Self-preservation Army," resisted efforts of authorities to drive them from buildings housing the tax collection bureau and higher court.

Police, however, succeeded in recapturing the public safety bureau, planting machine guns in every place of vantage.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Tientsin (Monday), Nov. 25.—Gen. Yin Ju-Keng today formally declared the creation of an autonomous regime for eastern Hopei Province.

The declaration was issued at Tungchow, near Peiping.

It was believed a preliminary to a general autonomy movement which would result in separation of the provinces of Hopei, Shantung, Shansi, Chahar and Suiyan—with a population of about 95,000,000 people—from the central Chinese government in Nanking.

Yin's declaration described the new regime as "the eastern Hopei anti-Communist, self-governing committee."

It proclaimed the complete independence of the former demilitarized zone established in north China at the insistence of the Japanese army after the Japanese military operations in the spring of 1933.

Army View Unknown.

The zone includes the rich cities of Peiping and Tientsin, but there was no indication that Yin intends an immediate effort to seize these centers.

"Gen. Yin has announced severance of all relations with the national government in Nanking," the Nippon Dempo (Japanese) News Agency said:

The attitude of the Japanese army, which can force events in north China any way it wishes, could not be learned immediately.

The position of the more powerful of the north China leaders, including Feng Yu-Hsiang, former "Christian general" and his follower, Gov. Han Fu-Chu, of Shantung, and Gen. Yen Hsi-Shan, overlord of Shansi and Suiyuan, also was obscure.

A council will be established to rule the autonomous area, Yin said.

Yin left for Tungchow last night after announcing that the first plank is his government's program would be the immediate crushing of all Communists. Earlier he had ordered the county governments of eastern Hopei to retain all revenues normally transferred to the central provincial governments since county officials will need "this money to suppress the Communist bandits."

Supervised Area.

Yin has been administrative inspector of the Shanhaikwan area of the demilitarized zone. He was educated in Japan and has a Japanese wife.

The Chinese city of Tientsin was in confusion. Thousands of wealthy Chinese were fleeing into the foreign concessions. Streets were congested with rickshas, motor trucks and automobiles laden with women and children and family possessions.

All houses in the British and Japanese concessions were jammed with refugees. Police allowed some

1,000 Guns Taken, Foes Beaten on Two Fronts, Africans Report.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Nov. 24.—Ethiopia's northern forces, fighting the Italian invader with every resource of traditional and modern warfare, have inflicted heavy losses upon the Fascist armies during the last fortnight, officials asserted today.

Semiofficial statement claimed:

4,700 Italians killed.

1,000 rifles and 40 machine guns, complete with ammunition captured.

Authorities regarded the arms seizure as more important to the ill-armed Ethiopian forces than the loss of Italian lives. The gains are the result of stiffened Ethiopian defense following capture of the northern city of Makale.

Small guerrilla bands which the Italians are unable to mop up in the jumbled mountains behind their lines have co-operated with the larger armies of Ras Seyour, Ras Ayaleu and others to harass the Italians.

Offense Held Costly.

A spokesman for Emperor Haile Selassie, while declining to give figures on Italian losses, asserted Ethiopia's defense preparations have reached a stage where every foot of advance by the Italians is made costly.

A pitched battle in the northern mountains still is postponed pending arrival of the King of Kings at the Dessye headquarters. However, single units of the Ethiopians now strike whenever opportunity arises.

The Emperor was heartened by reports of guerrilla bands darting from valleys to slash at Italian supply trains and outposts in the ancient Ethiopian fashion. He follows the activities of his trusted leader, Ras Siyoum, in Tambien with intense interest, reading dispatches before breakfast.

Foreign observers believe the Emperor will depart soon for the northern front to launch personally

Clipper Makes Midway Island In Fast Time

By the United Press.

Midway Islands, Nov. 24.—The China Clipper, proud pioneer of regular transpacific air mail and passenger service swept to an easy landing here at 2:01 p. m. (9:01 p. m. E. S. T.) today, completing the second leg of her historic flight from Alameda, Calif., to Manila.

Dwarfing the original clipper which visited Midway three times in trail-blazing flights during the spring and summer, the huge Martin flying boat slid up to the lagoon and to the landing ramp with a triumphant roar as her four motors "gunned" her along.

Capt. Edwin C. Musick, his crew of 6 men, and the 14 passengers who boarded the China Clipper in Honolulu appeared fresh after their 1,380-mile hop from Pearl Harbor.

The ship left Honolulu at 2:35 a. m. (12:35 p. m. E. S. T.). Picking up tail winds en route, she hit cruising speeds of better than 145 miles an hour to complete the flight in nine hours six minutes.

Island Visitors Scarce.

The spectacle of 14 passengers and 21 persons in all stepping from the huge airliner to this isolated mid-Pacific base seemed incredible. Midway, for years off the course of commercial steamers, visited only by vessels bringing supplies or relief crews to a cable station, suddenly had become a metropolitan point, figuring in the international "air bridge" being established by Pan-American Airways.

Clouds of birds, long used to complete ownership of the airlanes surrounding Midway and its atolls, wheeled with loud, screaming cries as the Martin plane zoomed downward.

The 51,000-pound load aboard the plane, consisting chiefly of mail intended for Manila, did not hamper operation of the craft. She rode easily to her berth.

Estimated time for the flight had

Patients Trapped in Rooms as 30 Attendants Fight Through Blaze With Stretchers in New Jersey Institution.

By the United Press.

Paterson, N. J., Nov. 24.—Two bed-ridden old women were burned to death today when a sudden fire swept a wing of the Christian Sanatorium for mental cases.

Heroic women nurses battled flames, snow and ice to save 41 other patients. They were carried to safety as firemen, fought fruitlessly to tear iron bars from the third floor windows.

It was on the third floor that the two trapped women were incinerated.

Inmates of four other buildings of the institution, which are perched high on the side of a steep, ice-covered mountain, were saved when firemen finally controlled the fire after a desperate struggle.

The dead were Mrs. Mary E. Duke, 77, Ridgewood, N. J., and Mrs. Barbara Sinke, 60, Prospect Park, N. J.

The nurses were at breakfast when Miss Nettie Harding, senior nurse, smelled smoke and sounded the fire gong. The ten nurses in the burning building joined by 20 others from adjoining buildings, quickly went through the wards in pairs, carrying out the screaming women.

The patients, not realizing their danger, were difficult to handle and fought the nurses. Doctors and male employes of the hospital, arriving by this time, went to their aid. The patients were carried out strapped to stretchers, one of which was kept under each bed, and deposited in the snow-covered yard, from where other attendants carried them to safe buildings.

Mrs. Duke and Mrs. Sinke, each of whom weighed more than 200 pounds, were on the top floor. Nurses succeeded in getting them on stretchers, but choked by the swirling smoke, were unable to carry them out. The nurses were forced to leave them and run below for aid.

By this time the stairs were impassable.

Meanwhile, fire apparatus had arrived from Paterson, Hawthorne and Prospect Park. The institution is high on Goffle Mountain, between

Warm-Hearted Washingtonians Rush to Give Unneeded Blood

One short news story wrung the hearts of Washingtonians yesterday, barraged Children's Hospital with telephone calls from men and women—offering their blood.

Oscar H. Poteet, unemployed construction foreman, of 220 C street northwest, had asked for some one to volunteer blood for a transfusion he thought his 5-year-old daughter, Mary Maude Poteet, needed and couldn't have—couldn't have because his blood didn't match hers and because he had no money to pay a professional.

It turned out that Poteet had been unduly alarmed. Mary Maude, convalescing from an appendicitis operation, didn't need the transfusion. Doctors had tested her father's blood only just in case . . .

But the story was printed. Twenty-five persons called Children's Hospital by late afternoon, volunteering their blood freely. Others telephoned The Post. Thankfully the offers were declined.

"We have a hospital list of donors who will give their blood free," a nurse at the hospital explained. "Of course the father didn't know that."

Policemen, lots of them, are on that list of volunteer blood-givers. Students, Government clerks, janitors, probably, too, the nurse said.

Also there are professional donors, paid $25 each time for the blood that strengthens patients in critical condition, that speeds the recovery of some others. And when a patient can afford it, the blood is purchased professionally.

Poteet didn't have to worry. There's always someone.

District Shivers as Mercury Drops Below Freezing Point

Washingtonians who decided to toast their toes in front of open fireplaces yesterday were justified, as winter continued its first real visit to the city with a low of 24 at 6 a. m., while the Atlantic Coast north of here was covered with 1 to 5 inches of ice, snow and slush.

Motorists who disregarded warnings of the Weather Bureau spent unpleasant hours thawing out their radiators. The thermometer, which failed to go above 41, all day, started sinking again as soon as the sun went down and was expected to reach 25 before daybreak.

Meanwhile, storm warnings were posted along the coast from Nantucket to Eastport, Me., as a disturbance of considerable intensity moved northeast from a point 250 miles southeast of Nantucket. Strong northerly winds were expected to hit the coast with gale force.

But none of this disturbance would touch the Capital, the forecaster promised last night. Fair weather is expected to remain here today, accompanied by slowly rising temperatures today and tomorrow.

New England traffic spent the day skidding around on the ice and snow. In New York Mayor LaGuardia called out his army of 5,200 snow shovelers, who went to work with 106 sanding machines and 15 motor brooms to remove the first snow of winter from the streets.

So sharply did the temperature dip Saturday night that many housewives here were forced to get out extra blankets before morning. Their husbands spent a good part of the day stoking up the furnaces, building open fires and tracking down defects in the heating system.

Fish Surrenders Lost Store Teeth!

E. W. Tranter, retired Navy captain fishing in the Gulf Stream on September 19, sneezed and lost his false teeth overboard. Today Capt. Olaf Olson, skipper of the charter boat Sea Hawk, returned to port with several fishermen and large quantities of red snapper.

One of the fish, cut open, yielded the missing teeth.

Now, there's a moral to this story. Had Capt. E. W. Tranter, retired, used the Lost and Found Ads in the Classified Columns of The Post, the red snapper would have returned the teeth much sooner. If you'd like to find a lost article,

Berlin Guards Secret of Raid; Priest Is Held

Catholics Insist Bishop's Assistant and Papers Were Seized.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Nov. 24.—Official silence tonight guarded the reported seizure of four batches of documents and the arrest of a Catholic priest closely connected with the Bishop of Berlin.

Catholic sources insisted the raid had been made Friday on the private rooms of Prelate Banasch and that both Banasch and an assistant were arrested. However, the secret police and the propaganda ministry refused to admit it.

Banasch lives in the same building with the bishop, Count Conrad von Preysing-Lichtenegg-Moos. The structure also houses the diocese administrative offices.

The motive for the reported raid, allegedly by Nazi secret police, was carefully guarded although Catholic circles said it was "in no way connected" with the smuggling of foreign exchange or the case of Bishop Peter Legge, of Meissen, who was convicted and fined 100,000 marks yesterday for contravention of the Devisen laws.

The Catholics said their efforts to obtain an exact statement from secret police as to why the alleged arrests were made had been unavailing. They appeared to lay considerable importance to the documents reported seized, but gave no intimation of what they might contain.

A Catholic youth organization was said ot have been ejected from its headquarters in Duesseldorf, while in Muenster an information office was closed.

Leoben, Austria, Nov. 24 (AP).—Jailing of profiteers and deportation of Nazis today were vigorously advocated by Prince Ernest von Starhemberg, vice chancellor and head of the Heimwehr (Home Guard).

In an address to 15,000 miners, Starhemberg threatened to throw the profiteers and exploiters of labor into concentration camps.

"Those employers who mistake the new Austria for a state of capitalistic dictatorship," he said, "and who have no feelings for the welfare of their workers will be recruited for a bit of service in the country's six prison camps."

The vice chancellor's address in this city in the heart of the Styrian mountains was looked upon as an effort to win to his support the miners and iron-workers who a year ago were in great part Nazis.

The vice chancellor bitterly assailed the "Nazi intellegentzia" and warned this class to "get into Germany before we strike."

Vatican City, Nov. 24 (AP).—A spokesman for the Vatican said today he believed no important document had been taken in the reported raid in Berlin on the private rooms of Prelate Banasch, close associate of the Bishop of Berlin.

The spokesman confirmed reports that the bishopric had been raided, but said no information had reached the Vatican regarding the seizure of church officials. Nor had a detailed report of the alleged incident been received from Berlin, he added.

when the Nipponese created Manchukuo.

The fact that Tungchow, some miles east of Peiping, was chosen for capital of the new independent province indicated to some observers the new government's desire not to risk possible foreign complications at this time by taking in Peiping, where all foreign diplomatic representatives accredited to the central Chinese government have their headquarters.

Three battalions of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, numbering more than 700 officers and men, are garrisoned at Tientsin. In addition, a Marine Corps guard of several hundred is maintained for the embassy at Peiping.

Britain, U. S. Concerned.

The joint concern of the United States and Great Britain in the Far Eastern developments was manifested here last week in an exchange of views on the situation by Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British ambassador, and William Phillips, Undersecretary of State.

Both countries have large investments and business interests which might be affected by Japanese influence over the economic and fiscal affairs of North China. A statement attributed in news dispatches to Yin Ju-Keng, leader of the East Hopei autonomy move, to the effect that he would "work in close harmony with Japan," was seen by some quarters as a basis for confirming their apprehensions.

The British-American consultations were described as general in scope and as not having dealt with any question of collaboration or concerted action by the two governments. Whether today's development will call for further discussions between them was a matter for speculation.

In effect, the Roosevelt Administration warned the Japanese government more than a year ago that it considered Nippon's expansionist policy on the Asiatic mainland contrary to the nine-power treaty which guarantees the territorial and political integrity of China.

There were authoritative indications that careful and prolonged study would be given the latest development before the government determined upon a further course of action, if any.

Federal Pressure Against Shipments to Italy Disturbs; Coal Gloom; Turkey on the Air.

By Raymond Clapper

THERE is something a trifle disturbing about the way the Administration is putting the heat on to discourage shipments of materials to Italy.

It has no authority directly to do this under the neutrality act. The result is sought through official "pressure"—which, as that term is used in Washington, means putting the fear of God into somebody.

Each American shipping company in debt to the Government received a letter a few days ago from the U. S. Shipping Board, calling attention to the fact that the Government held its mortgage and stating pointedly that shipments of war materials to Italy or Ethiopia were contrary to Government policy. It also was asserted in other quarters that governmental agencies having mortgage relationships with business and industry might seek to have their debtors comply with the Government policy of discouraging trade with belligerents.

That is a dangerous use of Government power. Public opinion may find little objection to its use for this particular purpose. But it ought to be constantly emphasized that this is an extraordinary use of power which the Government holds as a creditor.

It is not the kind of pressure which we want very much of. To accept this method as normal would mean that the householder who had been financed by HOLC might well expect that Government HOLC agents would be calling on him next fall to advise that he vote right. Powers of the Federal Government over business are vastly greater than ever before. There is scarcely a concern that could not be "reached" in some way from Washington if high authorities here suddenly decided to crack down on it.

A story is circulating among New York business men that it would be possible for President Roosevelt to declare an emergency and postpone the election for one year, thus continuing himself twelve months longer in office. This is of course impossible, but, at a recent meeting of business men in New York it is said to have been ominously hinted as a possible deep design on the part of Mr. Roosevelt.

This probably is a confused distortion of the fact that within the next few weeks, Mr. Roosevelt may extend for another year the period of the emergency for the purpose of continuing the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund in the Treasury. This fund, derived from the proceeds of gold devaluation, would revert to the general account of the Treasury January 30 unless another year's emergency is proclaimed.

Coal men say that enough anthracite to heat Washington is coming in from Russia and that the amount is increasing steadily. Appeals have been made at the White House for a higher tariff. One trouble is that the Russian coal brings a premium of 50 cents to a $1 a ton in New England where most of it is consumed. It gives off a fine blue flame and has less ash content than domestic anthracite, coal men say. This coal comes in over the $2 duty levied in 1932 and commands a price higher than Pennsylvania anthracite . . . Pennsylvania coal men steadily are becoming more concerned about the bootleg coal. It is mined by wildcatters who go out near a regular mine and with crude tools dig in and chop out coal and truck it to consuming centers. One coal man says it is estimated that 4,000,000 tons of this stolen coal have been sold in the last year . . . The gloomy outlook of the coal industry is not cheered up in the least by the fact that a new pipeline is going into Detroit, to connect this vast consuming center up with the Southwest field. A coal expert estimates that the opening of this line will take 125 coal trucks off of the streets of Detroit.

There will be one sure sign when the Administration really believes it has licked the depression. It will be when President Roosevelt permits a broadcast of the Thanksgiving turkey dinner festivities in which he participates annually at Warm Springs, Ga.

Broadcasters have tried in the past to get their microphones into this annual party but the White House always has refused. The real reason being that with millions out of work or barely existing, it was thought to be neither tactful nor politic to broadcast the President and the patients at Warm Springs feasting merrily amid the clatter of turkey bones.

The Reserve Board said the total volume of employment is slightly above that of a year ago and substantially above the lowest level of the depression. It estimated that 7,000,000 wage earners were employed in factories in September as compared with a depression low of 4,900,000 in the spring of 1933 and a high of 9,100,000 in the middle of 1929.

Also stressing rises in automobile, machinery, building material and electrical equipment industries, the board said "industrial profits, as indicated by reports of large corporations, were larger in each of the first three quarters of 1935 than in the corresponding periods of last year."

Submits Report.

The committee on relation of Government to industry of the National Association of Manufacturers is submitting its report against further Government interference to industries all over the country, prior to consideration by the annual Congress of American Industry in New York next week.

"We join in the demand made by every enlightened economic organization for abandonment of the philosophy that prosperity can be produced through curtailing production, whether in agriculture or industry," the report said. "The true abundant life can be supported only by abundant production of the things that enrich the lives of all."

Pointing out that "we may now appraise our situation and take counsel for the future upon the basis of sound principle without the necessity of compromising or adopting expedients under the stress of emergency conditions," the committee emphasized its opposition to any economy of scarcity, asserting that the cheaper a product can be produced, the cheaper it can be sold; the lower the selling price, the larger number of people who will buy and use it."

Would Hurt Wages.

On the subject of proposed Federal legislation to supplant the NRA, the committee said:

"Federal control of hours of labor must invetibly lead to the arbitrary, compulsory, and progressive shortening of the work week, coupled with an endeavor to preserve the weekly income of the wage-earner. The control over hours generally forces up prices and wage rates, but actual wages, and the accompanying endeavor to prevent a reduction in real wages is, in the long run, impossible of attainment and harmful to all concerned.

"We therefore recommend that the association should oppose any proposals for Federal legislation to take general control of wages and hours of labor."

Among specific recommendations made by the committee, of which James W. Hook, president of the Geometric Tool Co., New Haven, Conn., is chairman, were:

Opposition to proposed arbitrary shortening of the work week, as proposed in the 30-hour week bills.

Opposition to the Ellenbogen bill to set up a little NRA for textiles, the O'Mahoney bill for controlling industry through a system of licommerce, and the Walsh Government contract bill to use the weight censes to enter goods in interstate of Federal funds to compel acceptance of regulation.

Wagner Bill Hit.

Opposition to Federal use of corporate devices to enter into business operations, except in rare cases, and then they "should operate under the same rules as to borrowing, expenditures and auditing as the regular departments of Government."

Avoidance of extra-legal methods, such as proposals to enforce Federal regulations of local matters by barring the use of the mails.

Repeal of the Guffey coal act.

Postponement of the effective date of the tax burdens of the social security act in order that the problems involved may be carefully and impartially considered, and only so much of the act preserved as careful study shall indicate should be preserved.

of the people who had fled their homes to camp in the public parks.

Propagandists for the autonomous regime during the night had placarded the Chinese city announcing that separations from the central China regime headed by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek was at hand and asserting that Gen. Yin was in conference with leaders of the Japanese army and had their support.

Gen. Shih Yu-San, former governor of Anhwei province, was reported supporting the movement and the public safety bureau said he had planted hundreds of his followers in the Chinese city with orders to stage separatist demonstrations.

Some of Shih's followers were reported disguised as policemen. The safety bureau put all its police in summer uniforms so that they could be distinguished from impostors.

Shih is known as a swashbuckling military adventurer who is ready to organize a war at a moment's notice.

In Peiping the chancellors, presidents and deans of all government and private universities, the directors of the national library and other cultural leaders, signed a circular telegram to Chiang Kai-Shek announcing that "we solemnly declare that we are utterly opposed to any movement tending to detach any region of China from the jurisdiction of the Central government."

The foreign office in Nanking reportedly telegraphed all Chinese diplomats abroad to let it be known that "Nanking never will tolerate any autonomy movement in the north or elesewhere."

Sales Increase Of 15% Seen For Christmas

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Kansas City, Nov. 24.—The Nation's Christmas shoppers will spend 10 to 15 per cent more this year than last in the belief of business leaders from coast to coast.

The buying rush is on, earlier and heavier than it has been in years. Merchants from metropolis to main street expressed confidence today of volume surpassing all recent seasons.

Spending in some leading cities is expected to be twice that of depression years.

"Pay rolls are going up."
"Prices are higher."
"Federal aid."
"Good crops."
"People have more money to spend—they want better goods."

Early Demand.

The country's retailers, feeling increased buying trends, trotted out their Christmas dainties early and found a ready market. More important to them, they found an increased demand for staple merchandise. Sales, they said, are not limited to a pre-Christmas rush. All lines are selling at a pace akin to the good old days.

East—Cities expect sales upward to 25 per cent ahead of last year, 50 per cent better than 1929. New York, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., storekeepers are preparing for what one termed "the best holiday season in several years." Some Philadelphia stores underestimated the demand and ran short of stocks early.

50 Per Cent Gain.

Far West, Mountain States—Pacific Coast Christmas buying estimates range from Seattle's "quite a little better" to the 50 per cent increase in Los Angeles. San Francisco expects a 20 per cent improvement.

Central—Chicago dealers expressed the tone of the Central section by predicting a 15 per cent better Christmas than last year. Other cities said sales would double those of the depression holidays.

South, Southwest—Springlike weather retarded fall trade to an extent in Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky, but there were ready buyers for Christmas goods. Heavy industries are moving in the South, encouraging the holiday trade.

White Man's Body Found in Jungle

Corpse Discovery Revives Talk of Fawcett's Fate.

By the Associated Press.

Cuyaba, Brazil, Nov. 24.—Advices from a searching party in the interor of Matto Grosso they had found the body of a young white adventurer, slain and flayed by the Chavante savages, revived speculation today on the fate of Col. H. P. Fawcett, British explorer who vanished in that region ten years ago.

This is the second body found in that area recently, the other being that of a river boatman discovered in the remote reaches of the Araguaya River.

The searchers—40 employes of the National Telegraphs at the far north interior post of Paredaosinho, between Tachos and General Carneiro—reported they were unable to ascertain the name or origin of the young victim. They believe he was a farmer or a prospector who, penetrating the fringe of the Brazilian jungle, met the fate of other white men who have dared that feat.

Girl Dies, 6,000 Ill From Poisoned Bread

Murcia, Spain, Nov. 24 (AP).—The first death occurred today in the "poisoned bread" scourge that has claimed 6,000 victims since last Tuesday. On that day Jose Merones, baker, was arrested after 4,500 cases of colic were attributed to tainted bread prepared at his bakery.

The autopsy on the girl who died today showed that she had been poisoned by bread traced to the bakery which supplied the other victims. Authorities redoubled their efforts to clear up the mystifying case.

Security Rules Issued Despite Utility 'Strike'

Companies Seek Conference This Week to Discuss Act's Legal Test.

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission gave holding companies yesterday a taste of the sort of rules they will have to follow when—and if—they register under the utility law.

Registration is not required until December 1. After that the commission's authority becomes effective in many fields. To date no major utility has registered. If their present program of upsetting the act on constitutional grounds is successful, they are not likely to.

The new rules, covering what securities registered utility holding companies may buy or sell, were issued in line with the commission's policy of continuing the form and semblance of administration even though there are no companies listed to administer.

Commission officials termed the rules "safe and sane." They said they were based on effort to be entirely reasonable in an attempt to show that administration by the commission will not be harsh.

Hope for Conference.

Utility quarters have expressed a hope to meet with the commission this week in an effort to simplify the legal confusion arising from the varying approaches of the two groups toward developing a constitutional test of the act. Principally, these efforts would be directed toward limiting the number and character of test suits.

There appeared little chance the utilities would retreat from their determination to attack the act along every possible legal avenue.

Yesterday's rules, in general, tended to exempt from the commission's statutory powers over holding companies such holders of utility stock as banks, investment trusts and brokers. They left an extensive area for special definition in individual cases.

Six Classes Listed.

Six classes of securities were listed for investment by registered holding companies without application to the commission. These included investment of current funds in actively traded short-term securities, prime commercial paper, short-term notes of 50 per cent owned subsidiaries, its own or 50 per cent subsidiary obligations, its own or 50 per cent subsidiary stock, obligations of industrial or other enterprises in territory served by investing company.

Relatively simple as the rules were, they gave concrete evidence of what the commission's authority would become under the act. Utility holding companies have been almost entirely free to buy or sell securities as they wished and some have regarded this as an essential right.

Under the act, the Government in some cases actually will have to decide on the values of stocks a registered company may wish to purchase. It will have substantial power to permit or prevent such investments.

In general, the power was believed strong enough for the commission to authorize transactions looking toward simplification and prevent those that might lead to complexity, thus forcing the evolution of the "integrated" companies which the act ultimately would leave in existence.

Yugoslav Paper Assails France

By the Associated Press.

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 24.—France was bitterly attacked in the semiofficial newspaper Vreme today for the postponement of the trial of the three Croats charged with complicity in the murder of King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

(The trial was postponed indefinitely Tuesday, on the second day, at Aix-en-Provence, when Georges Desbons, French defense counsel, was disbarred for outspoken criticism of the presiding justice.)

In a vigorous editorial, which appeared as the chiefs of general staff of the Little Entente countries and the French military attache met here for their annual military conference, the paper said it spoke of the trial's postponement, although it should speak about the murder of the King.

"But about this," the editorial continued, "one cannot speak in an ordinary tone, nor in an ordinary voice, nor in ordinary terms. We are saving this unspoken speech deep in our hearts until the day when we are going to tell it with force and thunder."

Mexico Jails 11, Charges Rebel PlottoCatholics

Churchmen Say Accused Are Radicals Opposed to Archbishop.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, Nov. 24 (AP).—Officials of the Catholic Church today declined to comment on arrests of 12 members of the faith in the State of Jalisco on the charge that prominent Catholics are supporting a revolutionary movement there.

The 12 under arrest were describe by persons closely affiliated with the church as "left wing" Catholics, who favor force to fight the government.

Gen. Vincente Gonzalez, chief of the federal district police, charges the prisoners were instigators of the campaign against socialistic education which has led to many recent killings of rural school teachers.

Also under arrest are two women employes of the telephone company in Leon, State of Guanjuato, described in dispatches to the newspaper La Prensa as alleged members of an organization supplying arms and ammunition to the Jalisco rebels.

The alleged rebels, said by police to be commanded by Gen. Lauro Rocha, are impatient with the pacific policy of Mgr. Pascual Diaz, Archbishop of Mexico.

They have frequently charged the archbishop with "treason to the church," police said, because he favors conciliatory rather than forceful measures to recover the rights the church insists the government has taken from it.

With the exception of Gen. Luis Najera, the prisoners are held incommunicado pending the drafting of charges of sedition.

Gen. Najera, accused of being a commander of the alleged rebels, is ill in a hospital. He denied all connection with the plot and said his age, 76, and poor health prevented him from engaging in such activities. He protested loyalty to the government.

Each of the families of the school teachers slain for their part in socialistic education will receive 2,500 pesos (about $695), the government announced today.

A parade to protest the killing and mutilation of the teachers will be held next Sunday.

Two workers killed in Wednesday's clash betwen leftists and the Nationalist Gold Shirts were buried today after a single service. The funeral was attended by 10,000 members of union organizations.

League Policy Leads to War, Simonds Holds

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Town Hall of Washington, that weekly forum on current events, opened last evening before what might well be described as a brilliant gathering which filled the main ballroom of the Hotel Shoreham beyond the capacity of its seats. Several hundred men and women, the majority in evening attire, gathered to hear Frank Simonds, journalist and historian, declare again that he fully expected another catastrophic war to overtake Europe very soon.

Cherubic Mr. Simonds rasped his jeremiad to an appreciative audience and to a panel of questioners, who were hard put to find anything in his address with which they could disagree. Mr. Simonds, neatly dressed in a snug-fitting tuxedo, spoke on the subject, "Should America Stay at Home?" and definitely answered his own question in the affirmative.

He said, at the outset, that the serious question facing America was whether or not it intended to participate in the League of Nations sanctions against Italy. Such sanctions, he insisted, would hardly lead toward the path of peace. Sanctions amounted to suffocating Italy, he said, by the slow process of an economic embargo.

Sanctions Mean Ruin.

"You have got to ruin Italy in order to achieve the end the League has set out to accomplish," Mr. Simonds said. "Sanctions will eventually bring revolution and Bolshevism."

If ever the method of coercion could have been successful, it must have been with Grmany, Mr. Simonds pointed out, adding that coercion has never yet achieved its aims.

"At a certain point under coercion," he warned, "there comes a fusion of the people and then you have to destroy the people in order to exact your will." He continually referred to sanctions as a "hunger blockade."

Mr. Simonds then contrasted domestic with international law, insisting that under domestic law there are the police and the courts to enforce law, and the legislature to keep it fluid and living, but that under international law there are no means for modifying or changing oppressive treaties.

"No law," he said, "is enforceable if it is out of accord with the will of the people, and it becomes tyranny when it is imposed."

America Has No Share.

Rebel nations, he went on, ask no longer, as they have in the past, for political or racial equality, but they do insist upon economic equality. The consequence of unequal distribution of colonial territories and of the monopolistic policies of certain nations is an inevitable clash between what Mr. Simonds called the "haves" and the "have nots."

The effort to impose a League blockade upon Great Britain, France or the United States, he said, would fall of its own weight because of their independence of the material resources of other nations. But in Italy, he said, the resources are so limited that the "strangulation of sanctions" can succeed, and each "step that draws the noose together" confirms more fully Italy's argument against sanctions.

Italy, Germany, and Japan were moved to leave the League all for the same reasons, namely economic want and necessity, he said.

"With the departure of Germany, Japan and Italy, the League changes from a universal association to a collection of sated and satisfied imperialisms," Mr. Simonds said.

In such a situation, he said, America is invited to go abroad to a war already in progress and in the making of which we have had no share.

"We are urged to help freeze and starve Italy," he said, and then recalled the dreams of 1917, and saving the world for democracy and fighting the war to end wars. What have we to show today for those dreams? In Germany, he said, we have National Socialism, in Italy we have Fascism, and in Russia, Communism.

"Having assisted in making Germany safe for the Nazis," he asked, "why should we now make Italy safe for Communism? What we did to Germany through the World War we are now asked to do to Italy through a League war."

As Town Hall Opened Its Second Season

Copyright 1935, by the United Press.

Harar, Nov. 24.—Ras Desta Demtu, commander of Ethiopia's southwestern armies, has inflicted a severe defeat upon 2,000 Italians on the fringe of Bale Province, witnesses from the battle front recounted today.

The first witnesses arriving from the front in several weeks said a force of 4,500 Ethiopians, commanded by Desta, son-in-law of Emperor Haile Selassie, killed hundreds of Italians and captured tanks, guns and ammunition.

Italians Outnumbered.

The Italians, chiefly native Somalilanders fighting under the Fascist banner, had advanced northwestward along the Webbe Shibeli toward the big Ethiopian trading center of Ginir, 225 miles southeast of Addis Ababa. They had occupied the village of Hammer Gebbu and were proceeding to fortify the post when Ras Desta's men hurled themselves upon the Italians.

Although outnumbered more than two to one, the Italians put up a stiff fight, employing the tanks for quick dashes into the Ethiopian lines. However, superior strength won, the witnesses said, and the Italians retreated in good order toward the junction of the Webbe Shibel and Fafan.

This walled city continues uneasy over the recent visit of Italian observation planes. Two planes swooped low over the city, evidently taking aerial photographs, last week.

Ethiopians kept their antiaircraft guns trained on the planes, but did not fire when it became apparent the planes intended to drop no bombs. Many believe the observation was a prelude to a visit from bombers later.

Roads leading to the southern front are teeming with warriors en route to answer the Emperor's call for a decisive stand in Ogaden.

Officials at Jijiga reported that while E. A. Chapman Andrews, acting British consul at Harar, and Capt. R. H. F. Taylor, assistant military attache at Addis Ababa, were visiting the Ethiopian position at Dagga Bur, Italian planes bombarded the town severely.

Extent of casualties and damage was unknown invbgkshrd-Setaoivb was unknown at Jijiga. The Britishers returned safely after an extensive survey of the battle front.

Britain, France Agree to Delay Oil Ban Action

ban on oil would strike a swift and severe blow to Italy's war-making capacity.

These delegates figured that League states control 80 per cent of the oil exported to Italy and that America exports the remainder.

If the United States reduces or removes its oil exports to Italy, they said, it may be a major step toward forcing moves for peace in Africa.

Year's Supply Claimed

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Nov. 24.—Despite a threatened oil embargo, experts said tonight Italy has reduced petroleum consumption to the point where the nation believes it can carry on at home and in Africa for one year without running short.

Sources close to the government remained confident, meanwhile, that the United States would not apply an oil embargo against the Fascist state. They reiterated Italy would consider such "legal but hostile" action a violation of American neutrality and an aid to Ethiopia.

Italy depends to an appreciable extent on American oil, while Ethiopia does not, these persons pointed out. Thus an embargo would be unneutral, because it might affect the course of the war.

Italians stressed that combustible and lubricating oils are necessary to the internal life of Italy itself, and that the shortage of these oils in this mountainous country would cut off motor bus and truck communications with a thousand hamlets unserved by railroads.

Therefore, they contended that should the League of Nations committee of 18 place oil on the sanctions list by unanimous vote, the blow at Italy's internal life would constitute just another weapon in the economic siege which Italy always has insisted might lead to war.

Would Add U. S.

Should America, they added, add her weight to this blow in answer to the "inevitable" League request for adherence to resolutions of this sort, Italy would automatically be obliged to place her on the list of "despised sanctionist countries."

Italy uses about 700,000 tons of gasoline and oil yearly, of which she produces but 5 per cent. She has spent millions of lire to develop Albanian oil resources, where British and American concessions failed, and hopes for sizable additions to her supply from that nation.

An 8-inch pipe line from the mountains to the Albanian port of Valona has been completed, but details have been kept secret.

Italy Continues Preparations Against Britain

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Nov. 24.—Italy's preparedness against a possible clash with Great Britain continued tonight—overshadowed, but not halted, by war with Ethiopia and the sanction siege in Europe.

British declarations have brought some reassurance to Italy for continued peace in the Mediterranean. Benito Mussolini, on his own part, made the gesture of withdrawing a division of troops from Libya to lessen what Great Britain considered a threat against Egypt as a reprisal to the presence of the big British fleet in the inland sea.

But the fleet remains, Italian naval experts say, as much of a threat as ever.

Fleet at Alexandria.

It is clustered about Alexandria, too far away for planes to fly from Italy to bomb the warships and return. But if that physical separation makes for peace, Italian observers contend the actual presence of the fleet makes "incidents" possible.

Two things contribute to revive the Italo-British anxiety.

First, the economic boycott of Italy by 51 League nations is blamed on Great Britain by Italians, and each hardship increases Italian bitterness.

Second, Il Duce is continuing his physical and moral defensive measures.

His campaign to train his people how to protect themselves against air raids—begun October 28—goes on in southern Italy. Yesterday Palermo had a mock air raid.

Islands Fortified.

Perhaps even more significant is that military work is reported liable to continue in the Aegean Islands.

Leros a year ago was made a forbidden military zone. This island is a 450-mile flight from Alexandria—less than half the distance from any air base in Sicily to the British fleet.

The size and efficiency of the Leros war base is a military secret. But last year's decree, making it a prohibited zone, shows a seaplane base there.

Unofficial reports say it also has a heavy land force and usually about 50 war planes. If the base were large enough, strategists pointed out, the Italian air force could fly from Leros to fight the British fleet in the event of hostilities.

The military secrecy laws prevent telling all that is being done, but published official documents give the main facts of Italy's defense measures.

16 Prohibited Zones.

On the mainland and adjacent islands there are 16 other prohibited air zones. It is no secret that important ports have been fortified.

Curbs on Sale Of War Goods Studied by U.S.

Government Admits Past Warnings to Traders Are Ineffective.

By the Associated Press.

The Government sought yesterday to gauge the effect of its latest measures to halt American sales of essential war supplies to Italy and Ethiopia in furtherance of its neutrality program.

Admittedly unsuccessful in completely stopping trade with the belligerents thus far by moral pressure, Administration officials watched carefully to determine whether these more drastic steps would achieve their objective.

1—An implied threat by the Shipping Board Bureau to withhold Federal financial assistance to ship owners who permit vessels to carry cargoes to the war zone.

2—Outright prohibition by the same agency of the sale to Italy of obsolete ships which could be converted into scrap iron and steel.

Warnings Ignored.

These measures were invoked after repeated Administration warnings against trading with the combatants in East Africa had been ignored to an extent that reflected large increases in American exports of oil, copper, scrap iron and steel, motor trucks and tractors to Italy.

Trade with Ethiopia in such commodities always has been relatively insignificant.

A two-fold purpose lies behind the "no-trading-with-the-belligerents" policy: To keep America out of war and to avoid contributing to a prolongation of it.

Through a constant check by customs officials at the principal ports of shipments to the belligerents, the Government is supplied with a daily record by which it will be kept informed as to the efficacy of its moves.

Future Steps Doubtful.

What further steps, if any, it might take if they continued to prove inadequate was a subject of speculation. The belief was expressed in well-informed quarters, however, that there was little prospect at this time of an actual embargo against oil, copper and other so-called war materials.

An embargo already is in effect on arms, munitions and implements of war shipments, but it was said in responsible circles that additional legislation probably would be required before it could be widened to include other "key" commodities.

The present neutrality act, under which the arms embargo was applied, expires at the end of next February.

Italian Mop-Up Started to Keep Africans Apart

Drastic Drive Ordered to Prevent Union of Two Defending Forces.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Asmara, Nov. 24.—Gen. Ruggiero Santini today ordered the first army corps to prepare for a drastic "mopping up" campaign to prevent union of 1,000 Ethiopian guerrilla fighters under Dejas Kassa Sebat and Ras Siyoum's 30,000 regular and irregular troops.

Sebat, who recently fought a bitter engagement at Asbi with the Danakil column of Brig. Gen. Oreste Mariotti, has been scouted moving toward the Enda Moeni sector, between Amba Alagi and Lake Ashanghi.

Ras Siyoum, whose sudden appearance in eastern Tambien with a huge force of fighters caused hasty Italian flank movements last week, now is believed headed for that district to join Sebat.

Would Be Army Spearhead.

Presumably the armies of Siyoum and Kassa would form a spearhead for the 80,000 to 100,000 soldiers assembled along the fortified Ethiopian line at Lake Ashanghi by Ras Kassa.

Advices here give no details of Siyoum's departure from behind Makale, his retreat across the Takkaze evidently being as mysterious as his advance into the sector northwest of Makale.

It is believed Siyoum withdrew to avoid being nipped by an encircling movement launched along the upper Takkaze by the second army corps of Gen. Pietro Maravigna and from Makale by Eritrean columns. He left a few small detachments of guerilla warriors to harass Italian camps at night and keep the invaders preoccupied with the situation behind their advanced positions.

Italians in Key Positions.

Military authorities announced an Italian column of Askaris and irregulars had occupied strategic points along the Takkaze and Scire Rivers about 30 miles southwest of Aksum while Maravigna's second army corps had established itself along the Zongui, and Enda Micael zone, about 16 miles southeast of Aduwa.

Santini's first army corps now is based at Makale, ready for the next drive forward into Ethiopian territory. A column composed of national (white) troops and Askaris has scouted along the Scelicot and Elcalet zone, about 10 miles south of Makale, without encountering resistance.

King Reaches Athens to Take Greek Throne

City Delirious With Joy as Cruiser Docks With Ruler Aboard.

By the United Press.

Athens, Nov. 24.—A cruiser edged into a harbor ablaze with lights from the ancient Acropolis tonight, carrying King George II back to restore the dynasty of the Glucksburgs to Greece.

Flags rippled from arches and windows and the populace thundered its applause as the cruiser Helle neared the capital.

Many of the same persons who helped drive King George from the throne at bayonets' points in 1923 were on hand today to cheer his return. He came back as the result of a bloodless coup d'etat on October 10 and a national plebiscite on November 3, which resulted in a mighty monarchist majority.

For the King it was a vindication as well as a triumph. He never officially relinquished the throne of Greece. Wandering through 12 years of exile, he contended constantly he was the lawful head of the Greek government and predicted that some day his people would call him home. Tonight he found the smartly dressed women wearing medallions, engraved with his likeness; monocles—symbols of the old order—sparkled over the eyes of the men. George's crown was brought out of the National Museum where it has been kept since he fled into exile.

Outwardly all was calm in the streets here. Actually, police moved through the crowds, keeping vigilant watch on republican leaders. Owners of houses along the streets through which the royal procession was to pass were forbidden to accept visitors without police permission. The destroyers Hydra and Psara prowled along beside the Helle and soldiers and sailors formed lines along the principal streets.

From Corfu all around the Greek isles and mainland the peasants and townspeople made carnival. Reed and stringed orchestras, their members dressed in the native garb of kilts and tights, played gay music. Bonfires flamed on mountain peaks.

King George stood on the deck of the Helle, tears blurring his eyes as he silently saluted the crowds along the shore.

Firecrackers were set off from small boats, and on the deck of the royal cruisers a final review was held by the sovereign.

George's task will be to unify Greece which has boiled with revolt and intrigue for a decade. It began during the World War when King Constantine, George's father, expressed personal sympathy with Kaiser Wilhelm and was forced off the throne by the allies. His son, Alexander, was crowned, but he died of blood poisoning from the bite of a pet monkey. King Constantine returned to the throne in November, 1920, and affairs were peaceful until 1922, when an insurrection broke out in the army and Constantine was forced to abdicate. George became king.

An attempted revolution failed in October, 1923, but the growing unrest forced George and the Queen to establish their residence in London. The Greek Assembly deposed the Glucksburg dynasty in March, 1924, and a republic was declared. Eleutherios Venizelos became head of the government, but peace still eluded Greece.

Venizelos and Gen. George Kondylis exchanged power several times, and last year Venizelos attempted to lead a revolution, failed and fled to France. Royalist sympathy became dominant then, resulting in the return of George today.

Supreme Court May Rule Today On AAA Taxes

Action on Other Major New Deal Appeals Due Later.

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court, in its final session before hearing arguments involving the constitutionality of the New Deal farm program, may announce today whether it will rule on a case challenging the AAA's processing taxes.

Eight Southern rice millers have asked the justices to review the action of the New Orleans Federal District Court in dismissing their attack on the validity of the levies under the AAA law as amended last session in an effort to strengthen the original act.

They also requested a temporary injunction to restrain the Government from collecting October and subsequent processing taxes until the question is decided. The temporary stay was denied by both the district and circuit courts.

Recess to December 9.

After a brief session in which opinions may be read on several cases already submitted, the court will recess until December 9, when it will hear arguments on the Hoosac Mills case, involving processing taxes imposed under the original AAA. The Government has asked the tribunal in briefs to consider the amendment as a "ratification" of Congress' intent in the initial legislation.

On December 9 it is generally expected the justices will say whether they will review the conviction of Bruno Richard Hauptmann of kidnaping and murdering the Lindbergh baby.

Immediately after hearing the Hoosac Mills case the court will receive oral arguments on the Bankhead cotton production control act, challenged by Lee Moor, a Texas planter.

Other Pending Cases.

Ten days later—on December 19—the merits and demerits of the Tennessee Valley act will be presented orally to the court. The fourth New Deal case, involving the right of the Government to condemn land for its slum-clearance activities, probably will be argued late in January.

Other important litigation is headed for the high court, including attacks on the validity of the Guffey coal control bill, the utilities holding company act, the revised Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act and the Wagner labor disputes law.

Replying to the rice millers' suit, Solicitor General Stanley Reed asserted "the doctrine 'pay first and litigate later,' is an elementary principle in our system of taxation."

The millers assailed the AAA amendments which require that processors, before being reimbursed, must prove the taxes have not been passed on to others. They said this was "impossible of proof."

Liberty League Urges Ending Federal Relief

Claims Private Industry, 'if Given Chance,' Can Solve Unemployment.

The American Liberty League last night suggested that at the earliest possible moment the problem of relief be shifted back to the States, counties, municipalities and private agencies, "where it belongs under our form of government."

"The continuance of large deficits will lead only to a breakdown of governmental credit, inflation and irreparable injury to the entire Nation," the league said.

It was suggested that only when it is clearly demonstrated that the resources of a State are exhausted might the Federal Government properly loan it funds to carry on the work.

"Meanwhile," the league statement continued, "the Administration should adopt a direct relief policy which will be administered both economically and wisely so as not to encourage either idleness or dependence upon public charity."

"Private industry," the league said, "will furnish the solution of the unemployed problem if given half a chance. It must know that fiscal policies of the Treasury are on a sound basis, that the attempts to regulate industry and agriculture do not mean that our form of government is being changed to socialism, fascism or communism, that individual initiative is to be allowed to continue as a potent force in American life, that the incentive to work and take risks in business will not be destroyed by oppressive taxation and that future legislation will be kept within the bounds both of the Constitution and sound economic principles.

Discusses Politics.

"Until these assurances are given it is idle for the President to attempt to shift to private industry the onus for failure to reduce more rapidly the number of unemployed."

A section of the league statement headed "A Campaign Fund?" contains the following:

"Despite assurance that politics would not figure in the expenditure of the work-relief fund there are increasing evidences of lapses from such a policy. The potentialities along this line are such as to give reason for very grave concern.

"No administration has ever had such a huge fund for allotment at its discreation. If political considerations are allowed to enter into the distribution of the fund, the situation will be no different than prevails in autocracies where a dictator uses all the powers at his command to perpetuate himself in office."

Naval Experts Here Awaiting Parley Issues

Withhold Comment Until Other Nations Make Stand Known.

By the Associated Press.

American naval experts, preparing to sail Friday for the London Naval Conference, yesterday awaited clarification of parley issues before attempting any forecast of its trend.

London dispatches report the British government planning to issue an official communique outlining procedure and purposes of the conference and British views. It is scheduled to come this week.

As the Japanese delegates sailed from Tokyo, it was announced they would seek parity with Great Britain and the United States in future sea power.

None of the other signatory powers, however, has revealed programs or policies.

Until there has been a public presentation of something more tangible than the simple invitation to participate, Norman H. Davis, William Phillips and Admiral William H. Standley—American delegates—are withholding comment on what may come after the Washington and London naval treaties come to an end with the year, 1936.

Aside from asserting that naval policies of the United States remain unchanged and that the delegation will oppose the building of more expensive fleets, President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull have made it plain the United States will chart its course in London on the basis of the proposals made by other powers.

Davis, who represented the United States in the preliminary discussions, continued work over the week-end on the address he will make at the opening of the conference December 6, presenting the general attitude of this Government and its hope for continued limitation.

Conflicting desires for naval strength and interjection of numerous highly involved international issues—including Germany's rearmament program, the Italo-Ethiopian war and Japan's expansionist program in the Far East—have complicated the world armament situation.

While naval observers here share the pessimistic outlook expressed by many in Europe and Japan concerning any reduction in treaty-authorized tonnages, there was a strong hope that the discussions will clarify the naval situation generally and prevent any limited costly and competitive building race.

Trade Reserve Cut 20 Billions By Depression

By the United Press.

Financial reserves of American business were depleted by more than $20,000,000,000 in the first four years of the depression up to the end of 1933, according to figures made public last night by the Treasury Department.

The department in a "balance sheet" of all American business set the combined surplus and undivided profits of the 388,564 corporations reporting to it at $35,096,310,000 at the end of 1933.

This was a reduction of $983,215,000 from the previous year and a drop of $20,014,984,000 from the combined business surplus and undivided profits of $55,111,294,000 at the end of 1929.

A large part of these surpluses were eaten into the years of 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933 by heavy losses from business tranactions and payment of dividends out of surplus.

Total assets of American business at the end of 1933 were set at $268,206,000,000 compared with the all-time peak of $335,777,910,000 at the end of 1929. Cash and bank deposits of the corporations fell to $15,236,089,000 at the end of 1933 from $22,371,168,000 in 1929.

Their holdings of tax-exempt investments rose to $13,570,752,000 in 1933 from $10,338,364,000 in 1929. Capital assets fell to $104,958,353,000 from $116,446,100,000 in 1929. But the corporations were able to reduce their debts to $65,244,044,000 from $76,095,072,000 in 1929.

The Reserve Board in its monthly survey traced business trends since 1932 and observed that the present rise in activity was the only one out of a few starts that was sustained for more than a few months.

Wallace Praises States' Planning

Efforts for Effective Use of Resources Stressed.

Secretary Wallace yesterday joined President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes in commending the work of 46 State planning boards which co-operate with the national resources committee.

Wallace's assertion that studies indicated a "firm purpose on the part of the States to inventory natural and human resources and to plan for their more effective use" coincided with a resources committee statement that the planning move may "greatly" alter farming methods.

The committee, of which Ickes is chairman and Wallace a member, said that in 45 States, extensive surveys of land use had been made and that more were under way. State boards have prepared maps to show areas in crops and the proposed crop areas that would figure in land use program.

Loring Suitor Watched Home, Police Are Told

Ex-Admirer Paced Near House One Hour Before Slaying, Woman Says.

One of Corinna Loring's former suitors paced up and down in front of her home on the night of her disappearance, and within an hour of her murder, Police Chief Eugene Plumer announced last night.

Chief Plumer said the information had come to him through a Washington woman, a resident of southwest Seventh street, a member of whose family saw the man in front of the Loring home between 8 and 8:30 p. m. November 4.

At that time Mrs. Frances Loring, the girl's mother, was attending a church testimonial meeting and Corinna was at home alone ironing clothing in preparation for her marriage to Richard Tear, St. Elizabeth's Hospital attendant, scheduled for two days later.

It was an hour later, police believe, that some one, presumably a man, snuffed out the bride-elect's life with a length of twine drawn tightly about her neck.

The man named by the Washington woman already has been questioned by Joseph H. Itzel, ace Baltimore homicide investigator, Plumer disclosed.

The Washington woman, Plumer said, asserted the man acted nervously as he paced the Loring sidewalk, acting as though he were unable to make up his mind.

Shortly afterward, investigators have presumed, Corinna hurriedly changed from a house dress for street clothes, darkened the house to which she was never to return and went out into the night with someone she knew.

Her garroted body was found five nights later on lonely Saddleback Ridge about five blocks from her home.

Plumer said the woman's story would be checked and that the man she named would be questioned. The police chief, in charge of the murder in the absence of Itzel over the week-end, was careful to guard his movements.

Attack Attempted.

An attempted attack upon a 9-year-old girl made yesterday in the 3800 block of Thirty-first street just around the corner from the Loring home, last night turned the murder investigation once more toward the theory that Corinna met her death at the hands of a sex killer.

The man jumped from his car and attempted to grab the girl, police said, but her terrified screams frightened him away. From a description of her would-be attacker, police were led to believe that the man was the same as the one who has insulted women in the vicinity of the Loring home on at least four occasions since the crime.

Early in the investigation, police considered a sex-maniac theory of the killing, but the nature or Corinna's wounds and other facts learned at the autopsy tended to discredit it.

Washington police re-entered the case last night when it became known that the intended victom of the Thirty-first strete attack obtained the license number of the man's machine as it speeded away. The license was issued to a Washington.

He is being sought.

New Figure Enters.

Meanwhile, a new and mysterious figure was entering the case, a man living in New York City, who has come forward with the information that he, too, may be numbered among Corinna's admirers. Investigators said he was arrested recently in the metropolis and has since announced his desire to come to Mount Rainier to shed some light, if possible, on the crime.

"This man" was said to have lived in Mount Rainier several years ago and to have known Corinna at that time. Whether he and the slain girl ever went together, authorities were unable to say.

Itzel and his assistant, Sergt. Leo Vogelsang were in Baltimore yesterday examining the transcript of testimony informally taken from persons who have figured in the case thus far. They were to return to Upper Marlboro, murder-probe headquarters, today.

The list of persons to be interviewed by Itzel this week was expected to include Mrs. Harriet Whitehead, 4104 Thirteenth street, and Mrs. Mae Miles, 4105 Twenty-ninth street, who have told friends they saw a closed car being driven from the direction of the Loring home shortly after 9 p. m. on the night of Corinna's disappearance.

Little help was expected from this source, however, as Itzel observed that seeing an automobile going in any direction hardly could be called unusual.

Jungle Searched For Noted Fliers

Kingsford-Smith and Aid Sought in Siam.

By the Associated Press.

Singapore, Straits Settlement, Nov. 24.—Fresh reports that Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith's plane was seen crashing in the jungles of Siam today sent the Royal Air Force on a renewed search for the Australian pilot and his co-flier, Tom Pethybridge.

Natives of the village of Setul, Siam, near Perlis, reported witnessing the crack-up. The search will be concentrated on the border of Siam and Malaya.

Another search is in progress on Sayer Island, off the Siamese coast, for the fliers, who vanished two weeks ago attempting an England-to-Australia flight. They were last seen over the Bay of Bengal in a storm.

Capt. Hussey, commander of a plane which flew over Sayer Island, said he saw footprints on the sand. The Straits Steamship Co. ordered the vessel Matang to send landing parties to the island.

Where Two Died in Hospital Blaze

Firemen searching the ruins at Christian Sanatorium at Wyckoff, N. J., after two patients perished in a blaze that swept through one of the buildings yesterday. Officials said that heroic work of nurses prevented greater loss of life. Forty-one were rescued.

these cities, off the main highway. The roads up to the sanatorium are steep and were covered with ice and snow.

The fire truck slipped and skidded, greatly impeded by private cars of sightseers attracted by the fire. Stalled private cars prevented firemen from reaching the scene quickly.

The fire started in the basement, it was believed, and raced up a laundry chute. James Chamberlain, hospital handyman, said he was in the basement a short time before the alarm was sounded, but noticed nothing untoward and had no explanation on how the fire started.

The nurses removed all the patients, except the two who perished, within three minutes after the alarm sounded. Raymond Rhodes, volunteer fireman of Hawthorne, and one of the first to arrive, was high in praise of the nurses' heroism.

"It was just like a movie thriller," he said. "Flames and smoke were shooting from the building. These nurses ran in and out of the smoke-filled entrance, each time bringing a patient out on a stretcher. They put the patients on the ground, which was covered with snow and rushed back into the building.

Control of Radio By States Urged

Better Air Presentations Also Asked by Payne.

A proposal for State broadcasting commissions was advanced yesterday by George Henry Payne, of the Communications Commission.

Payne, who frequently has urged allocation of desirable broadcast time to cultural and educational programs, also discussed steps the Federal Communications Commission might take to improve air presentations.

Discussing how improvements might be effected, he had two suggestions:

That radio stations provide a definite amount of desirable time daily for educational and cultural programs—perhaps an hour in the daytime and an hour at night.

That programs broadcast at these periods be handled entirely under supervision of State broadcasting commissions appointed by Governors, thus relieving stations of responsibility and making possible presentations adapted to the cultural and educational needs of each State.

Prosecutor, Convicted Slayer, Today Tries 7 as Murderers

Missourian Keeps Office Although Sentenced in Street Killing.

By the Associated Press.

Centerville, Mo., Nov. 24.—The ironic drama of a prosecuting attorney under manslaughter sentence attempting to convict seven other men for murder will be enacted here tomorrow in a small wasp-haunted Ozark court room.

In the same room where yesterday he heard a jury of hill farmers sentence him to five years in prison for slaying Ruel Hunter, sawmill operator, in a street corner gun battle, 63-year-old Joseph L. Huett will prosecute a diminutive rural "Robin Hood" and six others for the killing of a mountain preacher.

The black-clad, tobacco-chewing prosecuting attorney—who boasts of having convicted more men than any predecessor—was freed on $5,000 bond pending outcome of his plea for a new trial.

At once he announced he would represent the State in the murder trials of little Bobby Camden, the "scourge of the Ozarks," and six alleged aids for the fatal shooting of the Rev. James A. Radford, Ellington, Mo., preacher-farmer, in August, 1933.

Judge Taylor Smith, who pronounced the farmal manslaughter sentence on Huett, demurred, but a ruling by Attorney General Roy McKittrick leaves the veteran prosecutor—rounding out his nineteenth year as a pleader of the State's cause—free to continue in office.

Assistant Attorney General J. H. Taylor, a member of McKittrick's staff, conducted Huett's prosecution.

Camden, a 5-foot, 120-pound will-o'-the-wisp renegade, compared to the legendary English outlaw for his custom of dividing his loot among penniless mountain families, is charged with slaying the minister with a .22-caliber rifle for a $100 fee.

Sheriff M. M. Jamison said Camden, serving a 30-year sentence for robbery, told him the money was promised him—but never paid—by Radford's stepsons, Emmett and Vernie Smith, who are also on trial. Other defendants are Camden's uncle, Will Camden; his cousin, Max Camden, and James Wofford, 73, and Wooford's son, Bud, 49.

Camden confessed, Sheriff Jamison said, he was hired by the Woffords and the Smith brothers to ambush and kill the preacher because they suspected him of responsibility in the death of his second wife, mother of the Smiths.

Mrs. Radford was killed when the minister lost control of his automobile and it crashed. He was not injured seriously.

Ducks, Caught in Oil In Bay, Drift to Doom

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 24 (AP). An offshore wind tonight was blowing many broadbill ducks, caught in a mass of crude oil in New Haven harbor toward Long Island, a State Board of Fisheries and Game official said.

The birds, caught Saturday in oil which had been pumped out of a sunken barge, were unable to swim or fly.

Ray E. Benson, who acts in advisory capacity for the fisheries and game board, said their feathers had absorbed the oil "like blotting paper" and that tonight the wind is carrying them out into the sound.

Benson said several hundred were rendered helpless. He added it was doubtful if any of the birds would survive as they are weakening themselves rapidly in attempts to pluck the oil soaked feathers from their breasts and are becoming sickened from swallowing oil.

Six Are Seized In $2,000,000 N. Y. Gem Raid

Police Club Gangsters as They Flee Offices on Bowery.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 24.—Six men, said by police to be among the country's master cracksmen, were arrested early today while attempting to loot the Jewelers Exchange on the Bowery.

Between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 in jewelry lies hidden in safes in the group of offices comprising the exchange at 82 Bowery, police estimated.

Detectives characterized the burglary attempt as one of the most ambitious crime plots in the city's history.

The prisoners were:

Charles Cohn (Charlie Cole), 39; Philip (Crooked Neck) Ziegler, 38; Peter (Petey) Kobac, 46; Max (Mockey) Price, 43; Jack (The Ox) Finkel, 33, and William (Dummy) Taylor, 46. All gave metropolitan addresses.

The six persons were taken to police headquarters and each was charged with burglary, possessing burglars' tools, and violation of the Sullivan law.

The six were arrested early today as they fled from the Exchange building, leaving behind two kits of burglars' tools and two loaded .38-caliber revolvers.

Police said none of the many safes had been bored.

Lieut. Richard Fennelly said he and 12 detectives had been "trailing" the men for 10 hours, guarding the front and rear to the Exchange and adjoining buildings through the night, waiting for them to emerge.

The police expected to arrest the men with the loot, Fennelly said, but the presence of a jeweler, M. Shiedlower, who slept overnight in his office, halted their work.

Shiedlower, in a fourth-floor office, said he was disturbed by the tapping of hammers as the men broke through the wall above.

The detective said the prisoners admitted Shiedlower's office was to be the first point of attack. From there they planned to go through the building and "clean out" safes, Fennelly quoted them as telling him.

Lava Fountain 400 Feet High Dazzles Hawaii

Follows the Path of 1855 Eruption Halted Five Miles From Hilo.

By the Associated Press.

Hilo, Hawaii, Nov. 24.—Mauna Loa cracked under the pressure of a new upheaval today, sending a cascade of white-hot lava down toward Hilo.

A slit 2 miles long appeared in the mountainside and belched molten rock 400 feet into the air with ear-splitting noises.

The scarlet river surged quickly 2 miles down the slope and rolled along the lava bed formed by the eruption of 1855.

Hilo viewed the new outbreak as the most significant of the recent activity, because the 1855 eruption sent lava to within 5 miles of the city.

Observers said the hot stream would flow more rapidly over an old lava bed than over the rough terrain characterizing most of the 40-mile stretch between Mauna Loa and the city.

Forms 75-Foot Cone.

E. G. Wingate, superintendent of Hawaii National Park, who discovered the new outbreak, said the lava first formed a cone 75 feet high around which molten rock swirled and boiled upward in a tumbling mass.

"It was an awe-inspiring sight," he said.

The great stream divided, part of it going toward Hilo. The other portion also separated, part of it heading along the saddle back, between Mauna Loa and Mauna Kea, and the remainder toward Keamoku, a cluster of sheep barns.

Observers said the latter flow would cross the mountain highway, providing a major traffic problem, if the flow continued.

Lava is so hot that it cannot be touched for at least a year. In many cases steaks have been cooked on lava a year old.

Lava Still Steams.

Long after cuts had been made through a lava bed for the present Keamoku highway steam rose from the hot mass whenever it rained.

Visitors crowded all sections of the island to witness the continuing spectacle. The volcano is 40 miles from Hilo.

The Inter-Island Airways, operating a fleet of planes from Honolulu, announced its facilities were booked solid for four days ahead. Legend says the volcano goddess Pele and Kama Puaa, the Hawaiian pig god, once had an argument and came to blows. Kama overpowered Pele. She begged for mercy and he promised peace if she would agree never to permit lava to flow down upon Hilo or Puna to the sea.

Buenos Aires, Nov. 24 (AP).—Jean Batten, New Zealand transatlantic flier, landed here today at 7:40 p. m. She covered the distance from Rio de Janeiro in 12 hours, 32 minutes. A huge crowd, including government officials, welcomed her.

Public Enemies Seek Learning In Prison Cells at Alcatraz

Correspondence Courses Found Popular With Criminals; Al Capone Reported Not Interested in Quest for Higher Knowledge.

By the Associated Press.

A few of the "public enemies" in Alcatraz, thwarted in crime, have turned to the higher life.

Sanford Bates, director of the prison bureau, said yesterday that 25 or 30 of the inmates of the Pacific island prison which houses America's most dangerous criminals are taking correspondence courses from the University of California.

Al Capone is not among them.

"We have no objection to the men studying if they want to," Bates said. "But they do it on their own time.

"Generally, if a man can read, he doesn't belong in Alcatraz."

In other prisons, where the Government tries to remold the younger criminals, regular classes are held.

"We try to get them up to the fifth or sixth grade in classes," Bates said. "If they want to go higher, we try to give them some individual instruction."

Federal prisons at Lewisburg, Pa., Chillicothe, Ohio, and McNeils Island, Wash., offer courses in English, shorthand, typewriting, mathematics and commercial law. Illiterate inmates are taught reading, writing and spelling.

Prison "trusties" who have been to school are used to help train their cellmates, but each prison also has instructors on its staff.

Budget Slash Will Be Sought By Buchanan

home for luncheon and remained for an hour and a half. Mrs. Buchanan was with him. They came to Warm Springs en route to Washington from their Texas home.

At the conclusion of the luncheon discussion, Mr. Roosevelt called for his small open car, climbed behind the wheel and went for a long drive through the surrounding countryside, riding over his 2,500-acre farm.

In the early evening, the President, accompanied by several members of his party, motored to the playhouse on the Warm Springs Foundation where he attended vesper services conducted by the Right Rev. Henry J. Mikell, Episcopal Bishop of Atlanta.

The hall was crowded for the services. Many of the infantile paralysis patients at the foundation attended.

In the next few days, Mr. Roosevelt was expected to find time to put the finishing touches to the major address he will deliver at Atlanta, the scene November 29 of a gigantic homecoming celebration in his honor.

The President spent a rather quiet Sunday, foregoing the usual morning swim in the pool here. He drove instead to the camp of his Marine Corps guard for an inspection. The Marines staged a drill for patients from the Foundation.

Federal Board Asked to Lower Bank Reserves

Advisory Council Report to Go Before Open Market Committee.

Action to lessen excess bank reserves which have reached the record-breaking total of $3,070,000,000 has been recommended to the Federal Reserve Board by the Federal Advisory Council, it was learned yesterday.

The recommendations will be pressed upon the open market committee which meets here next month. The council is expected to present a written report at that time.

As an initial step the council has recommended a decrease in the holdings of Government securities in the Federal Reserve system. As these securities mature they would not be replaced, thus gradually cutting down the holdings of the system and thereby contributing to a curb on excess reserves.

Although the Federal Reserve system has not added to its holdings for about two years, it has maintained them at a stationary position. Fresh buying has replaced maturing securities.

Margaret Hill Captures Honors At Indian Spring Horse Show

Rocksie, the sterling performer of Miss Margaret Cotter, won the reserve championship with 14 points—just one behind Questionnaire—while Miss Doris Hughes, 15-year-old daughter of Fred J. Hughes, sr., Washington dairyman and sportsman, was third with Catalan Blue.

First Appearance.

Miss Hughes, showing in the ring for the second time and making her first appearance in jumping competitions, scored 12 points with her 4-year-old thoroughbred hunter to seriously challenge both Questionnaire and Rocksie.

Outstanding in the pony events was another beginner, Miss Betty Jeanne Wheatley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Wheatley, of 4525 Iowa avenue, who won the pony jumping class and placed second in the pony saddle class. The blue scored in the jumping event was Miss Wheatley's first.

The knockdown and out sweepstakes was productive of one of the most thrilling jumping duels presented in this vcinity this year. Eight horses cleared the bars on the first trip around the course and four eventually landed in the select set that reached the 5-foot round.

Rocksie, owned by Miss Cotter, and Hunger Marcher, owned and ridden by Fenton M. Fadely, finally beat off the rest of the field and competed at 5 feet 2 inches for the first place. After four trips over the course Rocksie finally won.

Wins Handy Hunters.

Hunger Marcher won the handy hunters after a close battle with Fred J. Hughes jr.'s Black Caddy, both horses collected a number of ribbons in the open and pair jumping events.

Two Deaths Rouse Indiana Mine Town

Body Found in Sewer; Another to Be Exhumed.

By the Associated Press.

Linton, Ind., Nov. 24.—Two deaths—both attributed by Coroner George Porter to probable foul play—tonight shocked this mining area.

The body of Ves Gill, 72, retired coal mine superintendent, was found stuffed in a sewer at the side of a railroad track. He had been struck on the head, his pockets emptied.

At almost the same time the coroner announced he would exhume the body of John R. Hill, of Owensburg, who died a week ago under mysterious circumstances. Prosecutor Orval Hunter demanded an autopsy.

Porter said physicians who signed Hill's death certificate had not made a thorough investigation. A subsequent inquiry, he said, disclosed poison in biscuits Hill had eaten. Other members of the family were made ill.

Fire Company In Hyattsville Installs Alarms

Volunteer Department Setting Up Modern Signal System for Town.

The Hyattsville Volunteer Fire Department has announced the installation of a modern fire-alarm system in the town, with completion scheduled within the next few weeks.

A bell is to be placed in the home of each member of the department, which will ring half a minute before the town siren. Fire boxes are to be installed in each of the three schools, and a bell in the office of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, so that the water supply can be regulated in case of a large fire.

Twenty-one thousand feet of wire have been strung so far by members of the department, with 6,000 or 7,000 feet more remaining to be placed. For the first time bells have been installed in the homes of members living south of the bridge spanning the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

A community Christmas tree again will be sponsored by the department. A committee composed of Chief Ernest Davis, Harry Wilcoxen and Wayne Read, in charge of arrangements, has announced the location of the tree and the dates on which it will be lighted will be decided later.

Chief Davis has been nominated to succeed himself at the annual election to be held Monday, December 9. Other nominations are Alfred Digges, assistant chief; Earl S. Dorelle and Thomas Latimer, captain; Allen Baker and Lawrence Watson, lieutenant; Lyle Hester, Charles E. Trott and Joseph de Vincenzo, secretary; John J. Fainter, treasurer; Howard Holmes, fire marshal, and Harry Wilcoxen, superindent of machinery. Chief Davis and Holmes are nominees for delegates to the county advisory board and Baker and Trot the nominees for alternates.

The Holy Name Society of St. Jerome's Catholic Church, Hyattsville, will hold a meeting today at 8 p. m. in the old church hall.

Arthur J. (Dutch) Bergman, director of athletics and head football coach at Catholic University, will give an illustrated football talk. There will also be an address by Dr. Leo McVey, another member of the Catholic University staff.

John J. Buckley, president of the St. Jerome's Society, heads the committee in charge of the program, assisted by Caesar L. Aiello, Charles V. Joyce, Walter Walton, E. J. Cannon, Robert Fuerst and J. S. Williams.

Snyder-Farmer Post, No. 3, American Legion, Hyattsville, will hold its annual smoker and turkey drawing today at 8 p. m. in the National Guard Armory. Caesar L. Aiello is chairman of the arrangements committee.

A masked dance for the benefit of Marlboro Chapter, No. 61, Order of the Eastern Star, will be given Wednesday at 9 p. m. in the Masonic Hall. A prize waltz will be one of the highlights of the evening.

Footlight Club Gives Haskins Leading Role

Frederick J. Haskins, jr., well known in amateur theatrical groups in and around Washington, has been selected for the part of Capt. Stanhope in "Journey's End," to be staged by the University of Maryland Footlight Club.

The play, directed by Dr. Charles B. Hale, associate professor of English at the university, will be presented three consecutive nights, beginning Wednesday, December 4.

$100 Valuables Stolen.

Mrs. Georgette Richardson, 2604 University place northwest, reported to police yesterday that rare books, tapestries and household articles valued at $100 had been stolen from a garage in the rear of her home.

Alexandria Lodge, No. 758, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, will again sponsor a Christmas Eve party for the underprivileged children of Alexandria in the armory. Several hundred children will be given toys, gifts of other kinds and fruit and candy.

Policeman George W. Welker is vice chairman in charge, looking after the children to be invited, and is active in enlisting the citizens of the city in contributing. Discarded toys will be collected and renovated at the fire houses of the city, and persons having them are requested to leave such at the Elks Home, or at the headquarters of the United Charities, southeast corner of King and Washington streets, second floor.

The Parent-Teacher Association is assisting in the work, also teachers in both public and private schools.

The Sixth Ward Citizens Association will conduct an open forum this evening on the questions of legal Sunday motion picture shows and horse racing in Virginia. The meeting will be held at 8 o'clock in the Potomac Community House. Local civic bodies have been invited to participate in the forum.

Mrs. Ammia Zora Langley, aged 59 years, widow of James W. Langley, died yesterday at her home at 308 King street.

J. Herbert Taylor has been chosen chiarman of the committee on arrangements for the annual policeman's ball to be given on January 16, next, in the Armory. Harry F. Kennedy is vice president, Elliott F. Hoffman is treasurer and Maurice Rosenberg and Roger C. Sullivan from the publicity committee.

Henry Knox Field Lodge of Masons will meet in regular communication on Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock, in the Potomac Community Hall. Right Worshipful Earle J. Zalanka, of Quantico, district deputy grand master of District No. 1, will pay an official visit to the lodge. All master Masons are invited.

Killeen's Liquor License.

The slaying of Edward V. Killeen exposes a particularly sordid chapter in the history of crime in Washington. Since 1907 when he was first convicted on a charge of permitting gaming, Killeen had written for himself a locally unsavory record, even though it is surprisingly free of convictions. Disorderly conduct, assault, gaming—so reads his history on the police blotters. In 1921 he was tried and acquitted of murdering a woman. His case could now be quickly forgotten except for one point. Killeen, two years ago, applied for and received a wholesale beer distributor's license. In passing on the application, the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board decided that he had shown himself to be "of good moral character."

Is it thus that liquor is controlled in the District? Although even the police had not been able to present concrete evidence showing that Killeen was a gambler at the time he applied for this license, his reputation as an underworld character should have been sufficient to preclude his participation in the liquor business. Reports to the effect that he lost his beer agency when he tried to use strong-arm sales methods, should be sufficient warning against policies that tend to throw the liquor business into the hands of racketeers.

The case of Killeen must be remembered until it can be determined how many other individuals of similar "good moral character" are today peddling high-profit and high-content beer with the consent of the local ABC Board.

The P. U. C. Taxi Program.

The Public Utilities Commission is taking steps that may aid despairing motorists as well as pedestrians who daily find themselves stalled or forced to dodge dangerously about in the melee of Washington's traffic. The commission will propose at the next session of Congress a law to bring about gradual reduction of the number of taxicabs in the city. It is characteristic of the commission's technique that the weeding out process would not be undertaken suddenly; instead, as men dropped out of the taxi business in the natural course of events, new licenses would be refused.

It is further proposed to request compulsory taxicab insurance in the District. This, too, will meet with general favor. That a public carrier should be permitted to operate without assuming some responsibility for the safety of its passengers contradicts the whole theory on which a commission is appointed to safeguard the public. The argument that drivers cannot afford insurance on their present incomes is answered in large part by the plan to reduce the number of cabs, which should result in boosting the incomes of those that remain. If the commission is given complete authority to regulate the taxicab business it will be able to prescribe the conditions of service so that neither safety nor reasonable returns for drivers will be sacrificed.

The Trade Balance.

During the first ten months of the current year the United States had a favorable merchandise balance of only $96,707,000. From present indications the excess of exports for the year will be the lowest in a quarter of a century. There has been a slight increase in our sales abroad, however, as compared with a year ago, the reduction in the favorable balance being due to a rise of $321,000,000 in imports.

It begins to look as if the country were adjusting itself to its position as a creditor nation, prepared to buy goods in order to sell them. But it is too soon to jump to such conclusions, in view of the unusual conditions now prevailing. Our export trade has been very largely cut down by serious crop shortages and by restriction policies that have raised domestic prices of export commodities far above world levels. These conditions are certainly not a cause for rejoicing and there is no reason to expect that they represent a permanent development.

Furthermore, world-wide currency instability is still a large factor in determining trade trends. Despite the undervaluation of the dollar our import trade has risen while our exports have fallen. Theoretically, exports should have been stimulated and imports discouraged. And in the absence of incalculable counteracting influences, that would be the effect of monetary manipulation.

Certainly it is too soon to trace the influence of recent reciprocal trade agreements upon our import trade, although efforts will no doubt be made to discover a connection. Intelligent interpretation of these figures must, therefore, be postponed until they can be reviewed in the light of later developments.

The United States cannot expect to maintain a heavily favorable merchandise balance in view of our change to a creditor status and must therefore be prepared for a change that in the long run will be inevitable. It does not follow, however, that we can view with any approbation a closer adjustment of exports to imports, achieved because normal export outlets have been severely curtailed.

We should aim at balance on a higher level of both exporting and importing activity, achieved under conditions that assure the permanence of gains.

Toward A New Housing Policy.

No exhaustive study was needed to show the inadequacies and expose the economic fallacies of the Administration's present housing program. The value of the report which the Committee for Economic Recovery has submitted to the President lies in the substitute program it outlines and the constructive policy it suggests.

"Our home-building problem," the committee has decided after a year of research, "cannot be solved in the atmosphere of haste, rush and opportunism that necessarily comes with any temporary relief program." Nor can it be solved by rival governmental agencies competing in the development of model projects that will be a heavy drain upon taxpayers. In place of the hodge-podge policy now being pursued, the committee suggests a ten-year program through which the Government would aid the private building industry, instead of competing with it. "The time has arrived," the report says, "when the leadership of the Nation can no longer temporize with the problem."

The committee found that 10,000,000 American families are in need of better homes. To meet this need diverse governmental agencies are now building comparatively expensive dwellings for 30,000 to 40,000 families. Duplication of these high-cost and low-rental projects on an extensive scale is impossible. What seems to be necessary, therefore, is a completely new housing policy under which the Government will forsake the role of a philanthropic landlord and stimulate the building industry on a practical basis.

Construction of 750,000 homes per year is visualized by the Committee for Economic Recovery. They would range in cost from $2,500 to $6,000 apiece, with the greatest emphasis upon dwellings costing less than $4,000. That figure is below the prospective cost of many units which the Government is now building, with the aid of subsidies, for the very low income groups. The committee recommends that "modernized existing structures and Government-aided projects should provide homes for the income groups below $1,000 per annum." Obviously it is thinking in terms of practical enterprises, instead of extravagant subsidies that must necessarily be limited in their application.

Private enterprise would be relied upon for fully 85 per cent of the construction in the committee's program. The function of the Government would be confined to promotion of modern home-building and aid in financing construction on a large scale. The committee believes that with proper co-operation between the Government and savings and loan institutions interest rates to homeowners can be reduced as low as 4½ per cent and that initial costs can be reduced to a low rate. It also suggests a cut in labor costs in return for assurance of greater annual income to workmen in the building trades.

In this connection it is interesting to note the committee's estimate that construction of 750,000 homes per year would mean employment for 4,000,000 men. No recovery measure thus far adopted has made such a large dent upon unemployment. Nor is there in sight any other reasonable prospect of putting that many men to work without adding vast sums to the national debt.

Of course, the financial set-up recommended by the committee must be carefully scrutinized to avoid a merely temporary building boom at the expense of taxpayers. But there seems to be no insurmountable difficulties in the way if the plan is worked out systematically and in accord with sound principles of finance. Great Britain is successfully operating a similar plan, which, the committee believes, is responsible for "at least one-half of their economic recovery and the major part of their social protection against undemocratic principles."

Certainly the committee's plan is worthy of study as one of the major items for submission to the next session of Congress.

Noise And Safety.

No more universally popular statement could come from the White House at this time than the announcement that a national conference on land, sea and air accidents will be called soon by the President in an effort to relieve the existing "distressed situation." The Nation, gasping from the consequences of its thirst for speed, will closely follow the consultation of the specialists.

During 1934, it is estimated that 101,000 persons were fatally injured in accidents, 36,000 dying as a result of automobile injuries. To date this year, in the District alone, 102 persons have died in traffic accidents. From all sides the cry goes up that something must be done. Of course, that "something" will not be a single edict or change in technique of traffic control; it will be a combination of many changes in our methods of manipulating machinery.

Perhaps one of the many minor advances in the District will lie in the direction of controlling noise, now recognized as a definite traffic hazard insofar as it tends to promote confusion. District regulations already include provisions for the control of automobile signal devices. Unfortunately, they are too seldom remembered. Unnecessarily strident air horns and sirens blast through Washington streets every hour of the day and night. If this were forbidden it might be learned whether it was mere coincidence that New York, in the first four weeks of an anti-noise campaign, reported 751 fewer traffic accidents, a decrease of 22.5 per cent.

Revolt From Within.

The resignation of John L. Lewis as vice president of the American Federation of Labor assures an intensification of the struggle between the representatives of craft unionism and the proponents of industrial unionism. At the A. F. of L. convention last month in Atlantic City Mr. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, led the fight to secure a freer field for the organization of industrial unions, and encountered the determined opposition of the older, strongly entrenched craft organizations.

The intense feeling aroused by the clash of interests culminated in a dramatic and violent physical encounter between Mr. Lewis and the head of the carpenters' union. Mr. Lewis scored a triumph in this fistic encounter, but he was not successful in his major effort to secure a better deal for industrial unionism. Instead he has been publicly rebuked by the executive council of the federation, while his opponent has been selected to represent the federation at the International Labor Organization Conference to be held in Chile.

Mr. Lewis' surrender of office is, therefore, equivalent to an announcement that he means to carry on the fight to rout those opposed to the extension of industrial unionism. He plans to carry on the struggle from within, with the support of affiliated industrial unions, although dissociating himself from the hostile executive council. If his efforts to overcome opposition from entrenched representatives of the craft unions fail, a split in the ranks of organized labor seems virtually certain.

The trend toward industrial unionism is a result of changes in the structure of industry itself, which call for new types of labor organizations. The traditional emphasis upon the craft as the basis for organization has built up within the ranks of union labor a so-called aristocracy that has often been singularly indifferent to the interests of some employe groups. As a result of the strategic position occupied by the craft unions that cut across industrial lines, organization of unskilled or semi-skilled workers in the mass-production industries has been seriously retarded.

The spread of collective bargaining has emphasized the deficiencies of the craft union. Only a democratic type of union embracing workers of varying degrees of skill and representing many different occupations can be "truly representative" of all the workers within any given industry. It is evident, therefore, that Mr. Lewis has powerful impersonal allies aiding his struggle against those who now dictate the policies of the A. F. of L.

The questions at issue can not be settled by votes on a convention floor or by political maneuvers of federation officials, for the causes of conflict are deeper and more enduring than personal rivalries. The federation must either be prepared to modify its policies to meet the needs of labor in this present day, or face the prospect of a schism in the ranks of organized labor which will weaken both craft and vertical unions.

From Housewife To Heroine.

What constitutes a pipe dream was a reality last week in New York City when Mrs. Anne O'Shea, on her way to church, picked up a dirty envelope from the gutter and found herself the possessor of 87 fifty-dollar bills! The mere statement in itself is material for a story, but without the details it might be dismissed as simply another luck-of-the-Irish yarn. It takes on drama when one learns that Mrs. O'Shea owes several thousand dollars to doctors, that she has to pinch pennies, that she is nearing an age in life when comfort seems especially attractive, and that the money was turned over to police almost within the hour. And if an ironic O. Henry twist is desired, the serial numbers on the bills do not correspond with any reported stolen or lost.

Mrs. O'Shea will and should be commended for her honesty. But the main point is that the Queensborough housewife has lived through an experience that comes to few of us. Many a mortgage has been paid off and many a castle built on the wishful phrase, "If I had a million." For a few minutes, at least, Mrs. O'Shea must have let her fancy run free with those soggy bills. Doctors paid, house repaired, luxuries purchased, and a little put away for a rainy day! Mrs. O'Shea may never receive a monetary reward because the money may never be claimed. Nevertheless, she will always be the richer for this exciting interlude in which she found a new life at 40 within her grasp and had the supreme courage to let it go.

One auto manufacturer tests his cars by running them day and night at maximum speed until they fall to pieces. It's practically the same method employed by any 17-year-old.

The type of person who prides himself in always calling a spade a spade is usually giving somebody a dirty dig.

The Dionne quins have been signed for a full-length movie. It's a sad reflection to many of us that we may not be able to outlive the popularity of these sisters.

American Rights In Mexico.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos of experts in the State Department, the editorial writer in The Post would do well to refresh his memory on the chapter in "Washington Merry-go-Round" entitled "Wrong Horse Harry." The record of the State Department in backing wrong factions in Central and South America is too well known to allow credence or absolute confidence in the judgment of the members of that branch of the Government.

President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, in claiming that there have been no reports concerning violation of the religious rights of American citizens in Mexico, are grievously mistaken. I wonder whether either of them has read with care or with any degree of attention the sworn statement of Caroline Underwood, niece of former Senator Underwood, of Alabama, recording gross violation of these rights? Why does The Post ignore the 50 affidavits made out by American citizens relating other violations of American rights in Mexico, all of which are incorporated in the masterly speech of Representative John P. Higgins, of Massachusetts, delivered in the House of Representatives on June 10, 1935. This speech is entitled "Statesmanship—Not Intervention."

In a crushing refutation of Representative Tom Blanton, of Texas, who on the floor of the House made claims similar to that of President Roosevelt, Representative J. J. Boylan, of New York, during August, 1935, placed on record at least 50 other affidavits of American citizens of unimpeachable integrity who described the injury they had suffered because of a desire to worship God.

It should be noted that many of these sworn statements were made out by Protestants and Jews as well as Catholics.

New York Victory.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to refer to a letter of Senator James E. Murray, which appeared in a recent issue of The Post regarding the elections held in New York on November 5, 1935.

I am a New Yorker and I wish to congratulate Senator Murray upon his profound insight into the political situation in that State, as well as upon his knowledge of its Republican personalities. Such knowledge is not common in one whose training was obtained in the far West.

The Senator is right in claiming a Democratic victory in New York in spite of the fact that the Assembly was carried by the Republicans. The popular majority obtained by the Democrats was a substantial one and may be taken as an indication as to what will occur in the Presidential election.

A Fries Investigation?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My interest in your splendid editorials on the teaching of communism in the Washington schools drew my attention to the grouping of letters from readers on the subject.

The one signed by J. F. Higgins, Star City, W. Va., is timely. I heartily support Mr. Higgins. I am neither a Communist nor am I in sympathy with them, but like Mr. Higgins I am very much in favor of free speech. From what little I know of Gen. Fries and his activities he seems utterly opposed to everything which I believe to be my rights as a citizen under the Constitution.

"Independent thought and action," Mr. Higgins wrote, "is too precious a heritage to allow it to be destroyed without protest." I join my protest to his.

An investigation into the activities of Gen. Fries at the next session of Congress, I believe, is imperative. If we are to safeguard our freedom of speech some action toward that end cannot come too soon. To the east and to the west of us human beings are being slaughtered at the behest of military dictatorships. The denial of the freedom of speech is the first step to just such dictatorships.

Congress should act as soon as possible or it and we may have to forever afterward hold our tongues or lose our heads.

STEPHEN BROOKE.

Await McCarl Definition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the great interest and intense feeling which has been in evidence on the subject of communism and considering that the settlement of the question is of great financial importance to the entire teaching staff of the District, someone is certain to question the correctness of some teacher's affidavit as to not having taught or advocated communism. In that event it would be necessary for the Comptroller General to render a decision, based on what he understands by "teaching communism."

His definition should prove interesting. After we get that, we might proceed to decide whether the present Government of the U. S. S. R. may be termed communism or not, and, if not, perhaps our children might be told what form of government a considerable portion of the population of this globe is living under. But, until Mr. McCarl tells us just what he understands by communism, I do not think it much use to argue the point further. S. J. WARBERG.

The Verdict On Edith Maxwell.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Today I and my whole household were deeply moved by reading the verdict accorded Edith Maxwell by the jury of Wise, Va. To us the verdict is monstrous in its injustice.

Reading the facts of the case, it seems impossible that any jury could have given first-degree murder. Does not murder in the first degree belong to a planned intention to commit murder? Could any one believe this was a planned murder, done, at it was, by this poor girl returning in the middle of the night from her party; her only weapon a shoe she chanced to pick up when attacked by a drunken father, infuriated by anger?

Can this poor girl be said to have had a jury of her peers, judged as she was by 12 men, all deeply imbued by the cave-man's belief in a father's absolute right over his children, regardless of the rights belonging to them? Her jury should have comprised some women—young women and young men.

I, who write this, am no young person, instigating a revolt against parental authority, but a staid, 82-year-old, mid-Victorian, hating rouge, lipstick, painted finger nails, etc., but believing devoutly in justice and "the right to live for old and young; and this case breaks my heart.

I do not doubt they are preparing to submerge your paper with their appeals, but I call for help from every father and mother in this land whose happy young ones are going and coming on their own business and pleasures. Let us do what we can to bring justice for Edith Maxwell.

EVELYN D. WARD.
Lyells, Va., Nov. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Who has a right to fabricate a moral code, the breaking of which can bring death or imprisonment upon the head of the offender? That is just what those self-righteous Virginia mountaineers who have convicted Edith Maxwell, have done to a vivacious girl of 21 who, in self-defense, struck her father a blow, which brought death to the latter.

Is the Virginia mountaineers' moral code founded upon a reason so blind that it tolerates a man to live in a state of intoxication when he pleases, and visit any abuse or threat upon his wife and children when he will, just so that he sees that the streets are cleared out when the curfew rings?

If the elders who convicted her did so with the sanctimonious assurance that they had taken many a whipping from their fathers without balking, had not most human nature its own moral cowardice and fear before a stronger opponent, to account for a forced submission rather than a virtuous humility?

It is apparent that this young girl struck her father in self-defense. A butcher knife in the hand of a drunken and enraged father, who swears to "break her damned neck," is sufficient evidence for this phase of the justification of her act.

A SUBSCRIBER.
Washington, Nov. 22.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If all parties concerned were agreeable to the principles supposed to justify the parent and jury, there might be some question about intervention in the affairs of these mountain folks—although we do not accord the same privilege to those who desire to take their own lives, or to gangs of murderers who kill each other according to a set code, or to primitive peoples who wish to practice murderous religious rites. But, in this instance, a family, held in terror by the dead man, are the unwilling victims of the would-be respected mountain tradition.

In this day, when the principles of freedom are being screeched from the housetops, and corporation lawyers are offering their services to the oppressed, I wonder if there isn't someone, or agency, who will accept the responsibility of enlisting aid for appealing the case of the mountain girl—and her family? If the girl should be freed, she and her family probably would need help in re-establishing themselves in some other environment.

Will you, or some other responsible person, accept contributions from those who might be interested in this case—and are there lawyers with sufficient sense of justice who might volunteer their talent?

JUSTICE.

Did Beef-Eaters Eat Beef?

Post Office, Monday.

IT WAS the authoritative voice of one of those cosmopolitan announcers who tells your ears what your eyes are seeing on the newsreel:

"And here's Lady Alice Scott leaving her home for her Westminster Abbey wedding to the Duke of Gloucester, son of King George V. Father-in-law has sent one of his family coaches for her. Those gold-laced gentlemen holding open its door are Yeomen of the Guard, the famous Beefeaters of the Tower of London."

* * *

Well, there were only two errors in that statement:

The wedding, of course, took place in the Buckingham Palace chapel.

And those . . . "Yeomen of the Guard" weren't Yeomen of the Guard—they were footmen wearing the British royal livery.

* * *

In the interests of news licenses—which is a latitudinarian as poetic license—we'll forgive the little slip about Westminster. But will the Yeomen ever forgive the big slip about them?

* * *

A livery forsooth! Those hard hats and splendid coats are (Philosopher Herbert Spencer himself has said so, and Richard Steele before him) "the costume of Henry VIII's bodyguard." Dr. Spencer merely forgot that Elizabeth added the ruffs. They're the only bearded corps in the British Army.

* * *

At the coronation of the first Tudor monarch, "The King's Bodyguard of the Yeomen of the Guard," then 50 strong, paraded for the first time, under command of the thirteenth Earl of Oxford, John de Vere, armed — unlike preceding royal bodyguards—not with bows, but halberds. The number was gradually raised to 126, and "some of them were given bows."

By the accession of Henry VIII, who took one contingent to the Field of the Cloth of Gold and another to his siege of Boulogne, they were an abiding institution. A dozen were detailed to permanent duty at The Tower—then a palace as well as a prison—and these became the military ancestors of what is still extraordinarily well called "The Extraordinary of the Guard."

* * *

The yeomen fought for Queen Mary in the Wyatt uprising. Once, Raleigh was their chief. Charles II fixed their number, for all time following, at a hundred. They last saw active service at Dettingen. Now every man of them must have had previous military service as, at least, a sergeant.

* * *

Nevertheless, they are more ornamental than useful. Of old, they made the King's bed, tasted his food. In this era, they "search" the Houses of Parliament before His Majesty opens a session, guard him at the Royal Maundy ceremonies in the Abbey and at the offering of his Epiphany Gifts—"gold, frankincense and myrrh"—in the Chapel Royal of St. James Palace.

* * *

How, however, did the Yeomen, or some of them, come by the succulent name of Beefeaters?

Ah, that's another story—and a controversy!

* * *

It was long maintained that founder Henry gave them, as one of their earliest duties, the job of attending the royal buffet. Thus they were buffetiers, "buffeters," which soon became "buffeteers" and so, by progressive corruption, passed to its present state.

Such was the theory until along came that doughty etymologist, the Rev. Prof. Walter William Skeat, Litt. D. Not only did he say that there was no such word as buffetier in any French, late or early; Tudor Englishmen were perfectly competent to invent it. He said also that the alleged transition form, "buffeter," is undiscoverable in English publications of the period. He left the reader to suppose that the Yeomen were called Beefeaters because the staple of their ration was the roast beef of old England.

And we are bound to note that the Oxford Dictionary gives the derivation as "Beef-Eater."

* * *

Nevertheless, Skeat has an able opponent in another cleric, an LL.D.; E. Cobham Brewer. His suggestion is that "the word may have got corrupted almost ab initio in those unlettered days."

Similar corruptions are common enough, and have been surprisingly speedy, throughout the history of English:

"Andrew Macs" were sailors on the good ship Andromache. That famous Sixteenth Century inn the sign of which read "Boulogne Gafe" was always known as "The and Gate." The Anglo-Saxons thought that the constellation of the Great Bear resembled a ceorles waen, a farmer's wagon, so their successors term it "King Charles' Wain."

* * *

If you come to which, what did our sporting public of a few years ago call boxer Carpentier?

* * *

"Buffeters" into "Beefeaters": we like to believe it happened.

But "Yeomen" into "Footmen," or viceversa: not even a learned newsreel announcer can make us accept that!

The Same Spain.

Madrid, Nov. 23.

THE capital of Spain is strangely serene considering that the republic is only four years old and that two kinds of revolution broke out only a year ago on opposite coasts of the country and with opposite aims. In Barcelona the Catalans, who speak another language and consider themselves a cut above the best of the Spaniards, attempted to secede in a capitalist-royalist uprising. They thought they were paying too great a portion of the taxes and that they were the victims of the sloth and backwardness of the rest of the country. In the Asturias a Communist uprising tried to hurry the wheels of social and political reform the Russian way.

Both disturbances were put down with what the British would call firm, repressive measures. There was some killing in action, and a few other unfortunates were executed. With delicate tact the administration has refrained from shooting many of the political prisoners who were rounded up afterward. But, after all, many of them were old friends. Would Borah shoot George Moses?

Some of the Catalans were sentenced to 30 years or life as enemies of their country, but these and a group who remain to be tried are said to be enjoying all the comforts of a good club in the martyrdom. They may buy their own food, their quarters are comfortable and the Golden Rule is to govern the administration by the police in their case.

THE Communists, mostly miners, may be said to enjoy the same privileges as the Catalan aristocrats, except that, being coal miners and Communists they have no money with which to buy luxuries from outside.

That can hardly be called the fault of a struggling republic, however, and all of them may expect to be turned loose as soon as the republic feels strong enough to keep them under control.

It would be rash, indeed, of the present republic to line up all the prisoners and shoot them, because the pendulum is always swinging and there might come a time when the members of the current administration would be captured. In that case they could expect to be treated exactly as they had treated their prisoners. The Communists, to be sure, are an ill-mannered lot, without a profound sense of gratitude, and might return evil for good if they should ever operate a successful putsch. Still there is no harm in sowing seeds of kindness. Maybe they will be nice in their turn.

They take their politics very seriously, and the great variety of newspapers many of them mere pamphlets, each representing some "ism" or some politician, is a measure of the variety of political opinion. They disagree over "i" dots, and discussion of politics is easily the principal industry of the capital city next to eating and social drinking.

• • • •

NATURALLY, in the capital of the republic there are thousands of lobbyists, and a percentage of the kind who are sometimes denounced in Washington as "insidious" and "pernicious." Naturally, too, there are thousands of government employees and thousands of members of the old aristocracy whose fortunes, though doubtless impaired by world-wide depression, are still sufficient to keep them in stylish comfort and without productive toil.

In the hills outside of the city the peasants, shepherds and goatherds live a very simple existence.

Women seem less interested in apparel, but they lead a comparatively quiet, cloistered existence, seldom being seen in cafes and bars, which throb with the excited discussion of politics throughout the afternoon and far into the night. Pedro Chicote, the cocktail expert, entertains about 1,500 customers a day in his frisky and modernistic bar, which is frequented also by a remarkably demure and bashful clientele of ladies of the afternoon and evening.

The ladies sit and sit, hour after hour, and, unlike their aggressive sisters in New York, Paris and London, they wait to be saluted by the gents, whose preoccupation with politics, to leave morals out of the question, sometimes causes the ladies to be utterly ignored throughout the business day.

• • • •

IN a Spanish movie theater the other night a travel reel showed a strange local tribe of people somewhere off in the mountains who had grown from seven to nine fingers on each hand. In other European countries such a picture certainly would have been suppressed as tending to injure the reputation of the state, but the Spaniards of the Madrid audience seemed not at all chagrined but merely interested.

The King and his court are gone, for a while at least, and the republic has made some important developments, especially the building of roads, which were the passion of Primo Rivera as well as Huey Long. But it's not claimed that the wealth of Spain has been redistributed to a noticeable degree. The poor remain as poor as they were under Alfonso, but the luxurious life of the aristocrats, government employes and, of course, the inevitable grafters and fixers has not been impaired. Spain has gone republican, but the more she changes the more she remains the same.

Greater League Of Nations

By Bertram Pickard.
Special Correspondence of The Post.
Geneva.

THE title "The Greater League of Nations" is one that has been used sometimes to cover the whole field of international organization—official and unofficial. It is only recently that the importance of unofficial international organization has been realized by students of international relations. The purpose of this article is to sketch in outline the scope and significance of this relatively unexplored domain.

The pre-war position can be indicated in a few sentences. The rare word "international" entered the dictionaries only in the early nineteenth century at about the same time when, following the Napoleonic Wars, the first peace societies were inaugurated in London, New York and—prophetically—Geneva.

The nineteenth century witnessed a rapid growth of international organization—official and unofficial. Among the former the best known was perhaps the International Postal Union set up at Berne (Switzerland), and today successfully coordinating the foreign postal traffic of some 80 sovereign states, principalities, etc.

Private international organizations covering a wide range of human activity—professional, scientific, humanitarian, political, religious—had reached a total of some four hundred by 1914, their work being recorded and encouraged by two pioneer internationalists, Messrs. LaFontaine and Otlet of Brussels (both still living) who did much to promote co-operation and co-ordination in a field where this was, and is, much needed.

• • • •

THE World War played havoc with existing international societies, but with the coming of peace, and birth of the League of Nations, a new situation was created. The movement toward unofficial association across frontiers developed steadily at first so that by 1926 the pre-war figure of four hundred organizations had been reached; then at a faster tempo so that by 1929 the total was up by 50 per cent having reached six hundred; subsequently, because of the crisis, at a decelerated speed, the total today in 1935 being officially computed at some eight hundred organizations, this figure, of course, applying exclusively to bodies of a strictly non-commercial type.

As to the distribution, the following table shows the main centers of concentration, and reveals incidentally the static position of Geneva during the past few years resulting from the high exchange and cost of living in Switzerland.

Distribution.

	Total	Geneva	London	Brussels	Paris
Pre-war	400 orgs.	...	..	..	3
1926	400 orgs.	...	..	..	30
1929	600 orgs.	100	50	50	60
1935	800 orgs.	170	65	60	60

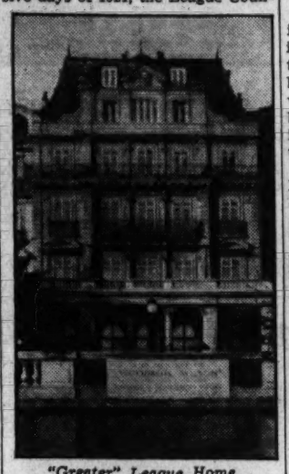
These figures—as so often happens with statistics—hide as much as they reveal, for the uninitiated. The growing attraction of Paris, as compared with Brussels and London, is due, in part, to the presence there of the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation, inaugurated in 1925, and, in effect, an offshoot of the League of Nations. This institute naturally attracts organizations of an educational and cultural character, whilst Paris was in any case chief center of professional and scientific bodies. One has only to scan the Paris list to be awed by the erudition of such august committees as that of Epizootics, or again on Nosological Nomenclature!

As for Geneva, though seemingly on a par with Brussels and London, and greatly outdistanced by Paris, the case is otherwise. As might be expected the character of the organizations in Geneva is conditioned by the establishment there of the League and the International Labor Organization. Just as Geneva is unique as center of cooperation between Governments, so is it also unique as center for those unofficial organizations dealing with international affairs and concerned to educate and mobilize opinion in connection with the major political, economic and moral issues of the day.

• • • •

THE drafters of the Covenant evidently expected that, once established, the League would become the heart and kernel of almost every kind of international activity. In practice, international organization has shown a tendency—probably a healthy one—to resist over-centralization. A few of the pre-League official bureaus (e. g. the Hydrographic Bureau) came under the control of Geneva, but more did not.

Moreover, although in the expansive days of 1921, the League Council interpreted Article XXIV so liberally as to admit the possibility of even unofficial bodies receiving the patronage of the League, by 1923 a more cautious mood had supervened, so that Article XXIV was given the restrictive meaning it clearly had. The Council while declaring "the value which it sets on the collaboration of unofficial organizations in the study of special questions," was concerned lest "even the appearance of an official supervision" should result in "diminishing the activity of these voluntary international organizations, the number of which is fortunately increasing!"



"Greater" League Home.

But, if in the end, the relationship established between the League and the unofficial bodies was one of polite differentiation, that does not mean that valuable contacts were precluded. On the contrary, under the guise of liaison (as the relation between the official and unofficial worlds is generally styled in Geneva circles) a great variety of links were established between the League organs and Secretariat on the one hand, and private organizations and their personnel, on the other.

Palais Des Nations To Become Center Of Federation.

FOR example, the International Bureaux Section of the League Secretariat published every few years a "Handbook of International Organizations," as well as a quarterly bulletin of information on their work. The Secretariat sends "observers" far and near to attend important meetings of the unofficial bodies. The Federation of League of Nations Societies (to which the League of Nations Association of the United States is affiliated) has the privilege of entree for its resolutions to the League's Official Journal, published during each Assembly.

The major women's organizations of the world have, through a joint standing committee, the recognized privilege of making recommendations to the secretary general of the League and to the director of the International Labor Office, concerning the appointment of women to committees and secretarial posts.

Again, the unofficial organizations have, on various occasions (e. g. at the Opium Conference in 1925, and the Disarmament Conference in 1933) been given an opportunity of expressing their views formally to the assembled delegates.

But, more important still, are the innumerable opportunities offered in Geneva for personal contact between representatives of unofficial bodies, and League personalities, whether delegates, experts or members of Secretariat. No doubt Capitol Hill offers extraordinary opportunities for lobbying, but Geneva is the lobbyists' paradise par excellence, since the statesmen not only of one nation but of 50 nations are placed there in a position of extreme vulnerability, whether in the corridors of the Palais des Nations, or the hotels along the Quai. Mr. Shearer (of armaments fame) showed what could be done at the ill-starred Naval Conference of 1926.

Happily there are others whose influence has been as salutary as his was pernicious.

• • • •

IN CONCLUSION, a word about the unofficial bodies established in Geneva. As has been said they include the majority of those concerned with international affairs. The Federation of League of Nations Societies has already been mentioned. There is also the Interparliamentary Union, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the International Red Cross, the International Union for Radiodiffusion; not to mention several religious organizations which interest themselves actively in League of Nations affairs, such as the World's Committees, both of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship Through the Churches, the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work, and the World Student Christian Federation.

Since 1929 these Geneva organizations have united in a federation which watches over their common interests at Geneva and today holds its seventh annual meeting, when among other things will be discussed a project for taking over the present Palais des Nations as a center of unofficial activity when the League moves presently to its new premises.

The Greater League of Nations, like the League itself, is only yet in its infancy, but it is a promising child.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Glorifying the American R. R. Train.

Our transportation chiefs are now glorifying the American railroad. Every week sees some road announcing a more beautiful combination of locomotive, tender, passenger cars and caboose. After the first few paragraphs of these advertisements it is difficult to tell whether you are reading about a train, a cigarette or a cosmetic.

• • • •

No longer do the roads speak of the 8:15 express or the 1:10 local. It's the Flying Phantom, the Golden Arrow, the Royal Crimson or something like that. We anticipate the moment when the old canal branch cow-train back home will be known as the Lily of the Valley.

Up to a short time ago the railroads put their emphasis on speed and roadbed only, with an occasional mention of a new club car sandwich.. Today the big idea is to give the train glamour and personality.

• • • •

You read of cork-lined floors, roller bearing, stabilizers, shock absorbers, shatterproof windows, ultra-modern interiors, de luxe upholstery, streamlining, adjustable seats, wider-vision windows and, believe it or not, superpower.

• • • •

Every effort is being made to provide what is probably known as "train charm."

• • • •

It is probably only a matter of time before the railroads will be advertising a certain express as giving passengers nonchalance, curing brain fag and providing social distinction.

• • • •

The railroad ads are becoming irresistible.

• • • •

A man picks up his newspaper with no idea of going anywhere and he suddenly finds himself seized with a mad impulse to grab the Crimson Comet and know what luxuries really are.

• • • •

All of which is okay. The railroads are awakening. They have been behind the times in the matter of publicity. Up to within the last year or two you could take a train or leave it. You knew the ventilation would be terrible, the coaches dirty and the trip 100 per cent uncomfortable.

• • • •

The depression, coupled with the bus and airplane competition, stirred the dozing railroad men to action. They suddenly tumbled to the fact that passengers wouldn't mind some of the comforts of home. Air conditioning became the rage, and the discovery that it was possible to take a deep breath inside an American railroad train and live gave travel an immediate boost.

• • • •

Comfortable seats, rubber cushioned trucks and everything but lace curtains followed. Public response was heartening. The railroads now appear to be coming back. Welcome to 'em! They've been away a long time.

And No Back Talk.

Presumably it may soon become a common experience for a public utilities corporation to hear the command, "Pull over to the side of the road; I wanna see your operator's license."

The Consolidated Gas Co. won't register and we wish we could say the same about its meters.

No End Of Books

By Theodore Hall

Brass Tacks.

IF a book of love lyrics by Sinclair Lewis were to come out today, or a novel by Chief Justice Hughes, or a collection of candid-camera photographs showing that Herr Hitler takes his mustache off every night and puts it on in the morning—if one or all of these works were now to pop over the horizon, I would put them gently but firmly aside in order to speak of a little book holding just 150 pages and costing but two bits. The slim little volume beside me is of infinitely greater importance to every one of you.

There comes, at some time or other, to everyone of us a night when we can't sleep for thinking, wondering, questioning what is going to happen to our country. We all are aware of some national dislocation or another, some turbulent current sweeping us irresistibly to some dead end, some conflict or friction which seems to be endurable and yet which can't go on forever. And we try to reconcile those things, and lose sleep, and get nowhere.

The refreshment, then, of following a clear, cogent mind as it examines these national problems—from unemployment to debts—and as it reaches conclusions which are courageous and intelligent, is the first feeling we have from reading David Cushman Coyle's masterly little work: "Brass Tacks" (National Home Library Foundation, Washington, $.25). Written with wit, good humor, and above all a brave application of common sense, this is the best book of prophetic economics for the American layman on which I have ever laid eyes.

IF our children of school age will just go away for a minute and leave us in adult privacy it may be possible to remark that the Communist theorists, on this earth, play the stoutest brand of chess there is. That is to say that in attacking our human economic problems they exhibit more logic and realism, and less wishful-thinking, than do the theorists of any other order. The starkness, intolerance and repressive nature of those theories are another matter—keeping the game on the chessboard of economics, our play in comparison has been feeble and flatulent.

This fact is profoundly regrettable to all of us. The Communists talk about income and debts, and we talk about liberty and free speech, and the two sides do not meet each other. Yet we have a conviction, deep as blood and bone, that we are the ones who are right. Hear, then, how Mr. Coyle comes straight to that point.

"This book," he writes, "is not for radicals who believe in the abolition of capitalism. This book is written for ordinary Americans who, though perplexed by the problems of the day, are still hopeful that plenty and security may be attained, and who do not want to fall into violent revolution nor to give up forever their ancestral liberties. Some of the adjustments needed for making the capitalist system work are necessarily drastic; but anyone who thinks the adjustments themselves are a surrender to communism has only to ask a Communist.

"Much of the underlying philosophy of these observations is old stuff, dating back to Hobson, and even to Malthus and Lord Lauderdale, over a century ago. Their works were gathering dust while we rushed toward our fate; but now the times are ripe, the hiss of collapsing shirt-fronts is all about us, the crisis is upon us; we must play up now or give way to those who will. This book is a vote for playing up."

• • • •

THERE you have Mr. Coyle's book—the intent of looking at the conditions of our era as sagely as Benjamin Franklin looked at the entirely different conditions of his; the boldness to recognize that some changes must be made; the avowed purpose of keeping such changes within the limits of the American scheme and the American temperament, and even the modesty and the flair for the sharp, telling phrases which mark this book so distinctively.

Not new is Mr. Coyle's attention to the fact that we built up this country by a couple of centuries of necessitous thrift, and that thrift to such an extent (shown in overweaning investment) is now a detriment to the system, even an impossibility. Nor does he for the first time point out the "capitalist fallacy" that a dollar can always go to work, or the constant conflict of interest between finance and business (when the one is up, the other is always down), nor the beneficial long-range effects of two such simple national maneuvers as high taxes on the upper incomes and corporate profits laid away as surplus, and the adoption of a Federal old-age pension.

But to have it all spread clear on the table, and to have it made memorable by its logic of argument and its pungency of expression, is a first-rate service to every thinking American. This 25-cent volume, filled with its penciled underscorings and thought upon at every page, should be in the pocket of each of us.

Aid for 10,000 Wounded Japan's Gift to Ethiopia

Paris, Nov. 24 (AP).—Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, head of the American Red Cross, said today Japan has sent enough surgical materials to the International Red Cross to care for 10,000 Ethiopian wounded.

Grayson, who will preside at the organization's congress here tomorrow, asserted 18 nations were contributing money, materials and ambulances to Emperor Haile Selassie's Red Cross and that two members of the international society now are in Addis Ababa coordinating the rescue work. Italy has refused to accept similar aid, he said.

Coughlin Links U. S. to League In Secret Pact

Radio Priest Declares This Nation Has Agreed to Back Sanctions.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Nov. 24.—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, who turned the fire of his National Union for Social Justice on the Roosevelt Administration's recovery policies a week ago, charged in an address today that the United States had made a semisecret pact with the League of Nations in 1933 to support sanctions.

An outspoken foe of American adherence to the League, Father Coughlin declared that his remarks on the semisecret agreement were probably "news" to most of his listeners. He characterized it as an effort "to entangle us in the activities of the League of Nations."

Says Davis Made Deal.

Speaking over a national radio hook-up, Father Coughlin said:

"A semisecret ambassadorial agreement was made with the League of Nations in 1933 that America would support the League in its sanctions against any aggressor."

He declared the agreement was made by Norman Davis, a European observer for the Roosevelt Administration.

The priest asserted that the purported agreement was a factor in England's decision to impose sanctions against Italy.

"This agreement was contrary to the will of the American public," he said, and made "evidently at the behest of the American President."

Holds War Inevitable.

"Move by move," said Father Coughlin, "the checkers are being played which will force us into the corner of an inevitable war. In 1937 our ears will be attuned to the blast of trumpets and the rumble of drums as the jobless American youth will be herded to the slaughterhouse abroad unless this foreign policy of minding England's business is summarily repudiated. These days are more perilous for America than you may suspect. The League of Nations and its sanctions exist for but one single purpose—to act only and when British interests are at stake."

Father Coughlin devoted most of his address to a discussion of communism, its tenets and its scope in this country, and declared:

Dr. Bohn Predicts World War in 1937

Germany Will Start Conflict, Anti-Nazi Declares.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 24.—Saying the next world war probably will be fought in 1937, Dr. Frank Bohn, national chairman of the emergency committee to aid Nazi refugees, said today that it would be his organization's purpose to rescue "the innocent victims of this coming Hitler-fostered terror."

"Germany, having made what is practically an alliance with Poland, will strive to conquer the Ukraine," Dr. Bohn said. "This is the next world war. It will come, normally, sometime in the spring or summer of 1937."

Bohn, son-in-law of Secretary of Commerce Daniel Roper, left for Washington tonight.

"If 21,000 Nazis in New York can wear the uniform of Hitler, if they can make the effort to bear arms and drill as regiments, then certainly a few of us can and should find time to expose their designs," he added. "We hope to go to Congress and demand a law which shall make an end of this army now encamped on our soil."

Farm Credit Loans Show Rise in October

A 37 per cent increase over the previous month in short-term loans made in October by Production Credit associations was reported yesterday by the Farm Credit Administration.

The increase by the associations carried total loans issued through FCA to $36,000,000, as compared with $26,300,000 in September. The associations loaned $20,200,000 in October, as against $14,700,000 in September, and $11,200,000 in October, 1934.

Dern Stops at Guam; Welcomed by Natives

Guam, Nov. 24 (AP).—Secretary of War George Dern inspected this American island outpost today during a stop en route home from Manila, where he represented President Roosevelt at the Philippine Commonwealth Government inauguration.

He received Gov. George A. Alexander aboard the cruiser Chester, then made a trip through the southern section of the island, where villages were decorated with flags, palms and bamboo arches.

Sen. Charles Murphy, Canadian Leader, Dies

Ottawa, Ontario, Nov. 24 (U.P.).—Senator Charles Murphy, 71, of Ottawa, former secretary of state in the Laurier government and later postmaster general in the first government of W. L. MacKenzie King, died here today.

Friend Indeed!

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 24 (U.P.).—Tom Douglas and Tom Burns ran out of gas last night. They started to siphon gas from the tank of a nearby car which they thought belonged to a "friend." Today they were arraigned on charges of attempted petty larceny. The "friend's" car belonged to a policeman.

G.O.P. Sees Danger Of Potato Shortage

Declares New Deal Policy Fosters Famine.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—The Western division of the Republican national committee asserted today that adverse crop developments have "given the American people a preview of what they may expect from the New Deal endeavor to apply regimentation to the potato growing industry."

"Freeze damage in the potato areas of Minnesota, Wisconsin and North Dakota, combined with what is known as 'air-cracking' in the Maine potato district, has brought a virtual potato famine to Seattle and shortage of potatoes in New York and several other cities," a statement said.

"Retail prices of this staple article of food have been impelled "to skyrocket in almost every market."

"Agricultural regimentation only needs the aid next summer of some unfavorable weather, and they will be able to remove potatoes from the American table."

Debt-Dodgers Use 'Pressure,' HOLC Reports

Hundreds Seek to Secure Help of Congressmen, Officials Say.

By the Associated Press.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation disclosed yesterday that "several hundred" borrowers have attempted to apply political pressure to avoid payments on loans.

Officials said about six cases daily are recorded in which borrowers have tried unsuccessfully to enlist the aid of Congressional Representatives in attempts to circumvent terms of their mortgages.

The Representatives and Senators, it was said, always check the HOLC to ascertain if there has been any unfairness.

"In every case," one official remarked, "we have explained the facts and there has been no further kick-back.

"They just want to be sure we are fair with the borrowers, and are co-operating very wholeheartedly and reasonably."

Attempts to ring in politics was said to come largely from "wilful delinquents" who refuse to pay when able to do so. These efforts are made when payments are past due and foreclosure is threatened.

The corporation made public a letter from Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, informing a constituent that "the only thing for one who owes the Home Owners Loan Corporation to do is to comply with the terms of the mortgage."

"The fact that the money is due the Government does not change the situation," Bailey continued. "Funds loaned by the Government are, after all, trust funds."

The corporation said Bailey's letter was indicative of "the position which many Senators and members of Congress have taken in the public interest, in asserting that the HOLC must pursue a firm policy of collection, and in expecting the corporation to act justly upon the circumstances of individual cases."

Gannett Joins Board Of Anti-War Group

Frederick J. Libby, director of the National Council for Prevention of War, announced yesterday Frank E. Gannett, newspaper publisher, had been elected to the council's executive board.

In accepting the office Gannett wrote:

"I am honored to be elected a member of your executive board. Your organization is doing great work and I want to congratulate you on the results you are achieving."

No Rest for Them.

Yonkers, N. Y., Nov. 24 (U.P.).—New city councilmen probably will set a new record for attendance during the next two years. Six Democrats and six Republicans were elected and the absence of one councilman would give the opposing party control over the office of city clerk, appointed by the council, and other patronage.

Lewis Puts Off His Explanation Of A. F. L. Split

By the Associated Press.

The labor world last night awaited John L. Lewis' own explanation of why he quit the American Federation of Labor's executive council.

Without making public any reason for his move, the president of the United Mine Workers and leader of the Federation's industrial forces resigned as the Federation's eleventh vice president Saturday in a one-sentence letter to William Green, A. F. of L. chief.

Lewis' office, however, told reporters he would have a press conference at 10:30 a. m. today. He was said to be "out of town" over the week-end.

Reason Debated.

That the resignation resulted from the prolonged fight between those Federationists favoring organization of workmen in mass production industries by industry and those who favor organization by craft, was common knowledge. Just what prompted Lewis to quit when he did was subject to different interpretations.

Several labor leaders very close to Lewis said the miners' chief felt he could wage a better battle for federation adoption of his views if he were outside the council—that any need for being "clubby" with his craft union foes would be terminated by the resignation.

They joined Green in discounting the suggestion that recently published "answers" to Lewis' Atlantic City convention charges that the federation's central office was inefficient, were the cause of the resignation.

Lewis, himself, recently told reporters he made the charges only to show the federation needed more members and more dues to build up a better central organization.

Green also denied last night there was any "rift" between him and Lewis, recalled that he—as a delegate from the U. M. W.—had voted for Lewis' industrial union proposal at the Atlantic City convention, and explained the "answers" situation as follows:

"The day I got back from Atlantic City I went to Mr. Lewis' office and told him I had gone over the summary (of the charges); that it was filled with inaccuracies, and that we would correct these inaccuracies. Mr. Lewis raised no objection.

Resolution Beaten.

After recalling that the convention had voted down Lewis' industrial union resolution, Green added:

"I happen to be the president of the American Federation of Labor, charged with the execution of the federation's policies. These policies will be executed religiously. I have my own opinions and I will fight for their adoption in an intelligent way."

Labor men in the Capital have known for some time that Lewis and Green did not see eye to eye on a number of matters, but they expressed the opinion that the resignation in itself would have no important effect on their relationship.

Arms Pact Talks Denied in Berlin

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Nov. 24.—Authoritative sources today insisted the recurrent Paris reports of a preliminary understanding between France, Britain and Germany regarding a Franco-German arms pact have not officially reached Berlin.

They conceded, however, the reports may have a foundation in truth.

No exchange of views on the matter has taken place between Paris and Berlin, qualified persons declared, nor was the matter mentioned Friday in the discussion between Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Andre Francois-Poncet, French ambassador to the Reich.

Nothing specific, these sources added, was discussed by Hitler and Francois-Poncet.

Missions' Head Gives Sermon Upon 'Loyalty'

Dr. McDowell Is Guest Preacher at Covenant Presbyterian Church.

Loyalty to Christ is not only the foundation of the religion that bears His name, but is also its motivating force, Dr. John McDowell, New York, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of National Missions, declared from the pulpit of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church yesterday morning.

Giving a guest sermon on "The Challenge of Loyalty" the missions executive, who was moderator of the denomination in 1933-1934, took his text from John, xxi:17, "Lovest, Thou Me?"

"The Christianity of Christ is built on the instinct of loyalty," Dr. McDowell declared. "One searches the Gospel in vain to find Christ ever appealing to any other instinct. His appeal was always to loyalty and for loyalty.

"The founders of other religions had said, 'Adopt our system'—the philosophers had said, 'Accept our ideas,' but Christ said, 'Come Unto Me,' 'Learn of Me, Love Me.' No other religion meets men with such a challenge for personal loyalty. Christ asked from men nothing of an external nature, but He steadily and constantly demanded their personal loyalty. When a man came to Him and said, 'Lord, I will follow Thee but my religion must not interfere with my business, or my politics, or my social life,' Christ then said, 'You cannot follow Me at all.'

Foundation of Christianity.

"Loyalty to Christ is the foundation of Christianity, the motive of obedience in Christianity, the incentive to sacrifice for Christianity. Loyalty to Christ was and is the distinctive mark of discipleship; it is the only test we have a right to apply to men today who want to be Christians. Christ insisted on followers in whom loyalty to Himself was the master passion of their life. Mark you, in the Christianity of Christ, it is a person, not a dogma, that invites our faith, wins our love, calls forth our obedience, inspires our services and is the object of our heart's loyalty.

"Christianity differs from all other religions in the fact that it is based on the person of its founder. Bereft of the person of its founder, Christianity would pass into an intellectual and ethical theory; it would cease to be a religion and become just another one of the many philosophies of the ages.

"The loyalty upon which Christianity has rested throughout the centuries and rests today, and must continue to rest, if it is to be true to the Christianity of Christ as revealed in the New Testament, is a loyalty that centers in the person of Jesus Christ. There is no substitute for loyalty to the Person of Christ in the Christianity of Christ in the New Testament."

'Old Age' Is Topic

The beauty of old age was compared to the glories of the rainbow and the sunset by the Rev. Hirl A. Kester, S. T. D., pastor of Congress Street M. E. Church, in his sermon this morning.

"Literature is full of beautiful songs and happy sayings about childhood and youth," he said, "Poets sing their praises to young manhood and womanhood. Old age has its songs but most of them are set to a minor key, with a sad note. Yet there is a beauty and glory in old age, not often written about, but with a universal appeal.

"We do not believe that God has blundered here. But in the sunset of human experience God has indeed made it possible for age to be beautiful and attractive, if we will have it so.

"Not much attention is paid today about 'How to Grow Old Beautifully.' Preparing for this ought to be the sweetest part of our human experience. It so often happens that when one approaches old age they are inclined to drop out of all helpful work, saying 'Let some young person do it,' and take life lying down. Indeed, I find many urging such action. The world needs the courage and help of old age as well as the strength of youth.

Peace and Contentment.

"There are some things we should carry with us if we are going to find peace and contentment. Your gold cannot buy them in the market nor your position achieve them. They are gifts of God. Love, unselfish desire to bless the world, consideration of the comfort and happiness of those about us, a cheerful and happy spirit, a sense of humor, appreciation for all things both great and small, gratitude to God.

"If these Christian graces are allowed to absorb the sunshine and showers of heaven—even the weakness and infirmity of old age cannot rob you of its rainbow and glorious sunset.

"God breathe into your heart the desire to realize in your life a beautiful old age."

Rev. Randall Preaches

Three elemental factors in developing a true Christian life were named by the Rev. O. J. Randall, pastor of Potomac Heights Community Church, in a sermon yesterday morning on "Evangelism and the Individual."

"In any serious study of the normal response of the individual to the evangelistic appeal, we are constantly congnizant of these three vital forces," the pastor said; "First, the definite committal of self to Christ as the giver of grace and the forgiver of sin, and as Lord of the whole of life, in which the dominant purpose will be to know and to do His will.

"Second, the frequent renewal and reaffirmation of acceptance of and allegiance to Christ. The daily renewal of faith is as integral a part of the Christian profession as the initial act of faith. Neglect of this is evidenced by the waning devotion of some and the complete spiritual shipwreck of others who have taken —but forgotten—the solemn vows of fidelity to Christ.

"Third, the alignment together of those who are like-minded toward Christ, as the best insurance against laxity in faith and life and as the ordained means of propagating the Gospel. The declaration of Jesus that His church should be built upon the foundation of confession of His divine sonship should be thoughtfully considered by those who are disposed to belittle the value of church fellowship.

"These three factors are elemental to the development of the average Christian life. They are correlative to each other. They form a sacred trinity in Christian experience. They, likewise, bring to the church and to each member thereof a triple opportunity and responsibility, namely, to bring other lives to the conscious response to Christ; to safeguard themselves and each other against the insidiousness of evil, and to increase the power of the church—Christ's chosen method of establishing his Kingdom—by increasing the number of its faithful members."

School to Instruct Teachers Formally Opened

Officials of Catholic University and the archdiocese were present yesterday at the blessing at the one-story school house where the Catholic Sisters' College is conducting education research. McVeigh, professor of education at Catholic University.

Catholic Grade School Opened By Archbishop

Tiny Institution Planned as Model for All Teachers.

A little one-story grade school, destined to play an important role in advancing Catholic education throughout America, was blessed at Catholic Sisters College yesterday afternoon at ceremonies directed by the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, and attended by Catholic University officials, college nuns and parents of the college's new model school.

The service marked the formal opening of the school in which 30 boys and girls have been attending classes since October 1. Supervised by the college, the school will offer opportunities for practice teaching for student sisters in the college and at the same time serve as a means of conducting research in teaching methods.

"I say this is a little school with a great big field of influence," declared Archbishop Curley as he spoke at services in the college chapel. He had previously led a group of sisters and clergymen to the school nearby for brief blessing rites.

Influence Nation-wide.

"In the 14 years that I have been archbishop I have conducted many school blessings. Some of the schools have been large ones. Perhaps none have been so small as is this one. Yet I say this is a most important occasion.

"Unlike other schools I have opened, this one is not destined to serve the needs of one community. Its influence is not to be localized. It will serve the whole country and will lead in the cause of the advancement of our Catholic education."

The archbishop said the Sisters' model school was to be used in teaching student teachers "how to do in the doing."

"Right here, where the sisters study the 'how' of teaching they will have the unusual opportunity of 'doing' some teaching. And that is important in the process of learning," Archbishop Curley said.

From the classrooms of the small school they had just blessed the teachers will go to the classrooms of Catholic schools in every parish of the United States to carry on the cause of truth.

The archbishop praised Mgr. Patrick J. McCormick, now acting rector of Catholic University, who, as dean of the Sisters College, had planned the model school. "This school is the result of one of the finest services Mgr. McCormick has given in his many years of service," he said.

He also pointed to the advantages to be enjoyed by pupils of the new school. "I know of no other school where boys and girls have the opportunity to come in contact with Catholic scholars as they do here," he said. "From their very first grade theirs is the atmosphere of a university campus."

Assisting the archbishop were several priests and dignitaries. Mgr. McCormick walked with Archbishop Curley in the procession from the chapel to the school. Also present were Dr. Edward B. Jordan, professor of education at the Catholic University; the Rev. Leo L. MacVeigh, also of the department of education at the university; Dr. George Johnson, director of the model school, who is a professor of education in the Sisters College, and Sister Mildred, O. S. F., who is principal of the school.

Million Plan to Tell Roosevelt Thanksgiving's a Jest to Them

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 24.—A sour Thanksgiving note will be sounded for President Roosevelt Tuesday when several hundred delegates from Maryland and 32 other States plan to dump into the laps of the White House secretariat a million "greeting" cards telling how little the senders have to be thankful for.

A campaign for signatures to the cards has been under way for three weeks under auspices of the Workers Alliance of America, a national organization of unemployed and WPA employes. In Baltimore, almost 5,000 of the cards have been signed through the efforts of the People's Unemployment League of Maryland.

In fact, according to James Blackwell, chairman of the league, the idea of sending the cards originated here and was passed on to the Alliance offices in New York. The cards are a pale blue and lettered in black. They read:

"Dear Mr. President:

"Greetings to you on the seventh Thanksgiving Day of depression. I would have had something to be thankful for if you had supported the program of the Workers Alliance of America for:

"1. Real works program providing decent wages at trade-union rates instead of the miserable 'security' wages.

"2. A standard of relief on which the unemployed could live in decency. (It is hard to be thankful with Federal relief being cut off on December 1.)

"3. The passage of the 30-hour-week law for industry with no reductions in pay.

"4. The adoption of the workers' rights amendment to the United States Constitution.

"As it is I have little to be thankful for on Thanksgiving Day, 1935."

The People's Unemployment League charges its members 10 cents a week in dues, which are paid out of relief allowances or WPA earnings.

The cards will be delivered by a delegation to save postage. Before going to the White House, the delegates will confer with Aubrey Williams, assistant Federal relief administrator.

Elephant Makes Little Of a Mighty Big Job

East Orange, N. J., Nov. 24 (U.P.).—An elephant—the kind that never forgets—obligingly shifted its weight in an overturned truck today until it had righted the vehicle, and then went for a walk through town.

Its name is "No-Name" and it was being moved to a circus' winter quarters in New York when the truck capsized. No-Name weighs 8,700 pounds and the truck might have been by the side of the road yet if No-Name had not rolled over and brought it upright again.

The accident broke No-Name's chains and he ambled down the street. He paused once to snatch a box of prepared toast from a woman's hand, swallowing both toast and box. Then he wandered through a wide door into a garage and settled down for the night next to an automobile.

Rabbi Simon Seals Event; Amateurs on Top; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Whether it is or not, the chief topic of interest in the minds of Washington's showmen this Monday morning ought to be the serious note of responsibility that was sounded at the second annual dinner-dance and entertainment of the Variety Club of Washington, Tent No. 11, Saturday night.

Inspired in its formation by a similar drab chapter in the life of some unknown mother, last Saturday night's Saturnalia took the form, finally, of a new dedication of the theatrical organization's purpose to a stanch advocacy of the welfare of an unnamed babe.

After some difficulty, but with conspicuous success, General Chairman Harry Somerville, managing director of the Hotel Willard, where the rout was celebrated, caught and held the attention of the assembled multitude sufficiently long to introduce Rabbi Simon, one of the chaplains of the club, who after that, by the sheer eloquence of oratory captured the interest of the roisterers in assembly.

Rabbi Simon, in fluent terms, pointed to the responsibility of the club in fostering the career of a baby girl who was present "in the flesh" to make sure her claim upon the affections of everyone who fell under the hypnotism of her baby charm.

This small child was left somewhere in Pittsburgh—as was the infant who gave the Variety Club its first national impetus—in a satchel for adoption, if anyone cared that much. Somebody did care that much.

It was, collectively, the membership of Tent No. 11—and that spells Washington.

So we have a baby to raise!

You should have witnessed the mass reaction of the club to its new responsibilty. There is something to reckon with in this Variety business!

Not the least of the Variety Club's claim to notice Saturday night was the entertainment program arranged by Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Fox Theater. Mr. Ford, as the saying goes, "combed the theater" for acts to make up his bill. The result of assiduous application to the fine-tooth business was a program that you could not have bought for all the tea in China or all the gold in that tentative subterranean hideout in Tennessee, or Kentucky, or wherever it is to be.

To recall now all of the turns that contributed to the biggest evening in the history of the club would be to catalogue something approximating the telephone directory in dimensions. However, it is possible to remember that substantial hits were scored by Ethel Pastor, the extraordinarilyy accomplished canary of the Troika; Bert Granoff, the Earle's contract tenor; the Three Slate Brothers, from the stage show at Loew's Fox; Ed Lowry, mastering ceremonies at the same house; the Three X Sisters, in a class by themselves, and I wouldn't kid you, from the Earle, these would be; June Carr, Cherry and June Preisser, and so many more that even the Marty Rubin, of the Heigh-Ho, most waggy of the finger-shakers could not hope to wave them all into view.

Square That Circle.

While the rest of the town is shivering members of the Studio of Theater Arts are very comfortable, thank you!

Wrapped in "sheep skins," leather coats, furs, boots and scarfs, they are rehearsing "Squaring the Circle," crack Soviet farce, the scene of which is laid in Russia, in January.

The studio's presentation on December 10 and 11 will be the first local showing of this play, although it has been running in numerous cities of Russia ever since 1928 and is currently to be seen on Broadway.

Leading roles in the local production will be played by Sonje Nordholm, Robert Duke, Adele Gusack, Norman Rose, Ralph Howenstein, and Karl Gay. The supporting cast will include Ethel Gottlieb, Jean McClellan, Elinor Evans, Florence Morin, Louise Shaw, Jehanne Burch, Dorothy Bolton, Consuelo Tellez, Margery Rice, Frank Westbrook and Vernon Lyden.

The production is under the personal direction of Constance Connor Brown who also is director of the studio.

Reverting momentarily—as, no doubt, will, be done for weeks on end, now—to the Saturday night festival of the Varsity Club, too much praise can not be bestowed upon those who had the success of the revel primarily in hand. They did so commendable a job that in the estimation of every one with whom this scrivener discussed the matter—and he discussed it with practically everybody in sight—the second annual club event exceeded the first in merit by easy 100 per cent.

That is quite a percentage by which anything might understandably excel anything else! But that is the way it appealed to all who were so fortunate as to be present—at $7.50 per plate.

Last season's first annual was a riot; Saturday night's auspicious gathering was a party of purest ray serene. Ask anyone.

Kicking That Gong Around.

One is happy to chronicle that last night's amateur program out at Sidney B. Lust's Cameo Theater in Mount Rainier, Md., was of such expansively successful proportions that it looks as if Mr. Lust would have to follow in the footsteps of Maj. Bowes, Heaven forfend, and do the thing on the air. According to all accounts, cash customers presented themselves in such profusion that it became necessary to hang them from the chandeliers.

The prize winners, arrived at through the convenient medium of audience applause, were Buddy Carper, 2804 Ash street, Mount Rainier; Miss Mickey Remington, Mount Rainier, with an imitation of Mae West; Dorothy Linehan, acrobatic dance; Doris Longnecker, Elizabeth Lucille Walp, Raymond Davey and Franklin Haughawout.

Similar programs of amateurs are planned for Mr. Lust's Arcade Theater in Hyattsville, in addition to repeat performances at the Cameo

Today at 2, if I have my memory on straight, the Warner Brothers executives will screen "So Red the Rose" for the benefit of those whose daily activities prevented their attendance at the Richmond preview last Thursday night—if that is when it was. Today's ceremonies will take place in the private projection room in the Earle Theater Building and will induct our new morning confrere, or confreress, or whatever she is, into the sacred formality of looking 'em over in advance. That would be Betty Hynes and a right likely "cricket" she is—unless you prefer Eddie Melcher's word of "crick."

Welcome, Betty, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul!

What's-in-Name Note.

I still think the fellow had something who laid claim to productional activity merely by devising a title without bothering about writing a play to go with it.

Sort of a scholastic iconoclast he was.

His title was "So Rose the Red!"

"THE RAINBOW GIRLS." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 24 scenes, with Herbie Faye, Jack LaMont, Lew Brown, Harry Seymour, Eddie Rash, John Quigg, Murray & Barton, Barbara Janis, Lolita, Bebe Tobin, Zuleka, Princess Chang Lee and the Dancing Bryanettes. Book by Jack LaMont. Dances routined by Frank Bryant. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Bordering on the unique, and resembling somewhat the variety bill of the "good old days" of B. F. Keith, "The Rainbow Girls" presents a burlesque show with sufficient highlights to raise what might otherwise have been a routine affair to heights which, if not dizzy, are at least a little giddy.

Particularly outstanding is the sole appearance of Princess Chang Lee in her own creation, "The Lamps of China," a melange of traditional and modern Oriental rhythms. With a costume composed principally of a score of tiny electric lights, and dance upon a stage devoid of other illumination, the number is in striking contrast to usual routines.

Lolita Leads Ladies.

With typical Castillian ebullience, Lolita tops the list of display artistes, which includes Babe Tobin and Jean Wade. Senorita Lolita scores no less a hit as the principal soubrette, in which business she is assisted by Barbara Janis.

Herbie Faye and Harry Seymour uphold in great style the farcical aspects of the show, with Jack LaMont and Lew Brown as capable straight men. Another novelty is John Quigg's accordion routine, Eddie Rash is the tenor, and a right good tenor, too.

The dance team of Murray and Barton is seen in a number of selections, and Zuleka does specialty work before the line girls as the prima ballerina.

Sharing honors with Walter Connolly in the Paramount picturization of Stark Young's novel of "So Red the Rose," is Randolph Scott, shown above in his latest portrait study. Mr. Scott is cast opposite Margaret Sullavan, a Tidewater actress who made her professional debut in the Capital several years ago in "A Modern Virgin," a stage comedy that inaugurated her drive to stellar eminence on both the boards and in shadow. "So Red the Rose" is being viewed this afternoon by those of the local critics who were unable to reach the recent Richmond premiere.

"MY SONG FOR YOU." Gaumont British picturization of a screen play by Richard Benson, starring Jos Kiepura, with Sonnie Hale, Aileen Marson, Emlyn Williams, Gina Malo, Muriel George, George Merritt and Reginald Smith. Music by M. Spoliansky and lyrics by F. Eyton. Directed by Maurice Elvey. Reviewed Sunday evening by W. A. Whitney.

The current wave of motion pictures, whose narratives are being embellished with selections from the classics of music, continues with "My Song for You," presenting again the rich, powerful voice of Jan Kiepura as its most important asset.

This production, which closes its engagement tomorrow night (George Arliss in "Mister Hobo" opening Wednesday at 11 a. m., sans preview), marks no cinema milestone, possesses little that is new or novel, yet is quite a pleasing bit of entertainment which neither takes itself seriously nor expects to be taken in any way save that of sheer amusement.

What really lifts "My Song for You" above the ordinary is the singing of Kiepura, who raises his voice in two light and three classic solos—"With All My Heart" and the title ditty, written especially for this work, "Celeste Aida" (Verdi), with supplemental music from "Aida;" "Ah, Yes, Thou Art Mine," from Verdi's "Il Trovatore" and "Ave Maria" (Schubert).

The essential story revolves around Opera Singer Gatti and his romance with Mary Newberg, who, irked by his rather unusual actions, all but marries one Kleeberg out of spite. The singing of the "Ave Maria," however, convinces her she still loves the opera star, and she quits the would-be groom at the altar, goes to Gatti and everything ends happily.

Keyed to Comedy.

Effectively keyed to light comedy, the picture moves along with celerity, with the musical numbers brought in logically, emphasizing the more dramatic counterpointing episodes. Not only does Mr. Kiepura's singing justify his star billing, but his smart playing further augments his position.

Aileen Marson, as the girl in question, brings new beauty and talent to the screen, a combination of attributes ably set forth and pressaging more enjoyable portrayals in the future. As Gatti's secretary, a combination manager and pressgent, Sonnie Hale furnishes many a farcical moment. The supporting cast, though relatively unknown on this side of the big pond, is very good, offering a series of delineations quite in keeping with the high standard of the principals.

The auxiliary program offers "Aladdin's Lamp," a Terry-Toon; "Way Out West," featuring the Cabin Kids; "Ladies Love Hats," an Ernest Truex comedy, with Mary Jane Barrett and Cora Witherspoon, and a release of Pathe News.

Newman Heard In Travel Talk On 'New' Italy

Topic Is Disappointingly Done, With Stress on 'Different' Items.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ITALY." A new Travelialk by E. M. Newman, first of three on successive Sunday afternoons in the National Theater at 3 p. m., illustrated by motion pictures and still photographic studies. Under the direction of Charles Mercer, Chicago. Reviewed Sunday afternoon.

In attempting to present an entirely new treatment of the ages-old story of the glories of Italy, it seems to me that E. M. Newman, returning to the major arena of his efforts to celebrate the silver anniversary of his career as a narrator of travel adventures, has sacrified interest to a studied effort to be "different."

There is, to be sure, little enough that the average traveler will detect in this travel talk that will parallel anything that he personally has done. It may be that he would not be sufficiently interested to make the attempt.

The Vale of D'Aosta, for instance, is a beautiful area upon which to permit the gaze to rest, but not for the length of time that Mr. Newman allots it. Its castles and picturesque peasants are, as Mr. Newman states, worthy of note, but not of such note as to justify the attention he bestows upon them.

This also is true of many of the other unfrequently trodden tracks that the lecturer traces through the kingdom now in strife with a remnant of the dark ages through the agency of Il Duce, whose prodigious profile is traced upon the screen only once or twice in the whole course of the talk.

Why a Dog Show?

There seems to be no reason why a study of Italy should be reduced for a considerable footage to the interesting, but irrelevant, matter of a dog show, but such is done to "pad" a talk that might more consistently be confined to material more in the public mind and news.

The consideration given the "newly formed" Vatican City and state is not so new as it pretends to be, nor is it so interesting. The same subject matter has been more interestingly and more comprehensively covered by lecturers who have preceded Mr. Newman in the chosen field of his latest effort.

In the contemplation of Alberabello and the unique architectural style of its principal buildings, Mr. Newman strikes a happy note. There is a good deal here, too, that is repetitious, but, in the main, the picturesqueness of the topic is well brought out and amusingly sustained.

The item of tuna fishing has little to commend it, apart from its revelation of the size to which these denizens of the deep are able to grow.

Altogether, the first of the three Newman talks to comprise this year's quota is in the nature of a disappointment, not only in the character of its material but also in the hesitant manner of its delivery.

Pennsylvania Chamber Opposes U. S. Spending

Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 24 (AP).—Ernest J. Poole, president of the State Chamber of Commerce, announced the result of a referendum today, showing the membership "virtually unanimous" in opposing trends of Federal legislation.

The members voiced their most emphatic opinion on the question whether the Federal Government should "at the present time exercise Federal spending power without relation to revenues?" Poole said 99.6 per cent voted no.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

Harold Bauer and Albert Spalding in a recital of sonatas for piano and violin, Constitution Hall, Sunday afternoon. Program: Sonata in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2 (Beethoven), Sonata in B flat major (Mozart), Sonata in A major (Franck).

When two technically accomplished artists, who are of kindred minds in interpretation, join forces in a sonata recital, the result is music-making of a deeply satisfying nature. The very association in a collaborative performance of this kind implies that each artist places the music itself above any consideration of vainglory, and that each makes concessions to the other in the common service of beauty. Each retains his personal integrity, while there is at the same time an admirable fusion of the best qualities of both players.

How many opportunties Harold Bauer and Albert Spalding have had for co-operative readings one does not know, but their playing yesterday afternoon had the ease, the suppleness and the elasticity which are ordinarily the result of long companionship. As disparate in solo work as they are in temperaments, they combined their styles with remarkable efficacy, while each retained enough of his idiosyncracy to constitute a foil for the other.

The three contrasted compositions on their program allowed them a wide latitude in interpretation, and in each case the composer was treated on a common basis of understanding and sympathy. There was no trace of the dichotomy which one sometimes hears in sonata playing, when the pianist pursues one idea and the violinist another. Their readings were homogeneous, thoroughly unified in spirit, and animated by a parallel vitality.

So agreed were the two artists in the details of phrasing and dynamics, so in accord as to the meaning of the music, that it would be hard to say which of the sonatas was the most enjoyable. For the characteristics of Beethoven, Mozart and Franck, were disclosed with the vividness of portraiture, and the styles were preserved with a fine intuitive insight.

The somber passion and energy of Beethoven's C minor sonata was marked by his contemporaries as a new and more positively individual note in his music. Stormy and purposeful, it contains a quintessence of poetic power, and it moves with the determination of dark-browed Beethoven himself. Completely integrated in conception, it has the structural strength which results from a major idea pervading the four movements and binding them together.

Because of the impression of unity which the sonata now makes upon us, it is interesting to know that it did not quite suit Beethoven when he had finished it. The eloquent Adagio Cantabile was originally composed in the key of G major, and he transposed it to A flat major, possibly because the latter is a richer tonality for the piano. We are told that he spoke of the piquant Scherzo as being out of keeping with the rest of the work, and that he wanted to remove it entirely.

The B flat major sonata of Mozart flows with the spontaneity of free and untrammeled inspiration. That seeming want of effort is one of Mozart's traits that makes us think of him as always sunny and radiant, whereas there are depths beneath the smiling surface and darkness behind the light.

Perhaps the artists reached their climax of their playing in the splendid reading of the Franck sonata; at least they read it with an earnestness that brought out its spirituality to the full. No purer and more refined a nature than Franck's was ever disclosed in music, and not without reason has he been called the seraphic composer. His sonata, soaring to heights of beatitude, is a companion-piece for his symphony.

An appreciative audience gave Messrs. Bauer and Spalding to understand that their artistry had been stirring; it recalled them frequently after each sonata, and at the conclusion of the program, it unmistakably asked for more. This request was granted with a spirited performance of the last movement of the "Kreutzer," thus bringing the program to a full circle.

Stories About the Pictures You're Seeing.

Hollywood, Nov. 24.

"CRIME AND PUNISHMENT": Josef von Sternberg's initial flicker without his Trilby. Director Von Sternberg, separated artistically from Marlene Dietrich and commercially from Paramount, went to Columbia, where he made this picture for a moderate cost and brought it in on a quick shooting schedule.

Director Von Sternberg averaged more set-ups a day on "Crime and Punishment" than he did with Miss Dietrich in a week. Von Sternberg would give his instructions to Peter Lorre in German. He always spoke to Miss Dietrich on the set in that language.

When directing Marian Marsh, Von Sternberg would play her role with Lorre and have Miss Marsh be the audience. He was friendly on the set and after each command would say, "Thank you."

• • •

There isn't any set in Hollywood as quiet as a Von Sternberg set. Stagehands, generally noisy, practically stand at attention. The first day of shooting Director Von Sternberg appeared in overalls and sandals. When asked why, he said that he was new to the Columbia Studio, many stories had preceded his appearance, so that he wore overalls to show them that he was the workers' friend.

A frequent visitor to the set of "Crime and Punishment," interested in watching Director Von Sternberg, was Marlene Dietrich.

• • • •

"FRISCO KID": James Cagney has a free-for-all battle with Fred Kohler in an early sequence. This fight was rehearsed, staged and then photographed. While it was being filmed Cagney tripped and sprained an ankle. The battle had to be postponed. It was fairly genuine, more real than most wrestling bouts.

Interesting to watch was the burning of the Barbary Coast sequence. There were hundreds of extras employed as vigilantes and the scene was filmed at night, as most fire sequences are. The Los Angeles Fire Department was on duty. A small duplicate section of the Barbary Coast was actually built and destroyed. Director Lloyd Bacon had the vigilantes march with burning torches one night and was ready to burn the set when he realized that he would need the set the next day for a reverse shot.

George E. Stone talks Jewish in a scene to Cagney, who pretends that he doesn't understand. As a matter of fact, Cagney speaks a better Jewish than Stone.

• • • •

"THANKS A MILLION": This yarn of the crooner, Dick Powell, who runs for Governor and is elected, is not as far-fetched as it seems. The story was inspired by the career of an orchestra leader, who on a gag and entertainment program, ran for Mayor of Seattle. One of his slogans was, "A Glass of Beer for Every Passenger on a Street Car." He was defeated. Later this orchestra leader ran on the Democratic ticket for the office of Lieutenant Governor of the State of Washington.

And do you know who the Lieutenant Governor of Washington is today? He's Vic Meyer, the former orchestra leader.

• • • •

"SPLENDOR": Rachel Crothers, the playwright, made a unique agreement with Sam Goldwyn. Miss Crothers wrote the entire scenario, rehearsed the troupe for a week, helped Richard Day design the sets and didn't ask a penny for salary. She made a contract with Goldwyn for a percentage of the profits. She gambled—the same as an author does with a play. Rachel Crothers was given $1,000 to make the contract legal.

Miss Crothers rehearsed Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea and the players as if she were staging a play. Director Elliot Nugent sat in on these rehearsals. Often he would get up and say, "That is fine, very fine. But now for the camera, Miss Hopkins, you'll have to move this way." Director Nugent would change instructions, but Miss Crothers understood, and they got along fine.

• • • •

When Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea played that scene in the rain, each had ten sets of their costumes ready to wear in this sequence. Director Nugent had to film this from various camera angles and couldn't wait for the water-soaked garments to dry.

The swimming pool sequence was filmed at Sam Goldwyn's house.

Rachel Crothers worked at Metro at $2,500 a week to do the screen adaptation of "No More Ladies." She had only one line of dialogue in the flicker. She was annoyed to discover that she had collaborators on this scenario. She says she always believed a collaborator was some one you worked with and not against.

Filipino Freedom Laid to War Fear

Quezon Told U. S. Will Not Aid Island Republic.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 24.—In a letter to Manuel Quezon, newly inaugurated President of the Philippines, Col. Theodore Roosevelt tonight declared Congressional action to launch the islands as an independent state was motivated largely by a fear their protection might bring the United States into war.

Roosevelt, former Governor of the islands, said his letter was intended to refute an inaugural address in which he quoted Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, as assuring the islanders the United States always would be ready to protect them from other powers.

"As a matter of cold actuality," said Roosevelt, "the American people will not jeopardize their interests in the future for an independent Philippines any more than they will for any other nation, and most certainly would not engage in a war in their behalf unless the real interests of the United States were involved."

The liberation act was expression of "a desire on the part of a large element in the United States to rid themselves of a responsibility that might entail a war," he said.

Police Chief Wins a Bird, One Already Home.

After consulting his wife, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, has changed his mind about eating the turkey he won Thursday night at the meeting of the Southwest Citizens Association. Instead, he is giving it to the Boys Club of the Police Department.

Maj. Brown won the turkey at a meeting of the association. Everyone attending was given a ticket at the door and the major's was the one drawn out of the hat.

When he got home, however, Mrs. Brown informed him she already had a turkey. So the boys will get the bird.

Steel Strength Indicates Rise Is Imminent

Mill Operations Gain 2½ Points in Week to 54½% Capacity.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 24.—Uncertainties pertaining to finished steel prices for the first quarter are expected to be cleared away by producers this week, preparatory to opening books for that period December 2 in line with former code practice, states the magazine Steel.

While majority opinion has strongly favored advances up to the close of last week there was no positive indication of which products are to be raised, or amounts. In this respect the situation was unlike that which prevailed under the code when prices were announced ten days prior to the opening of the books.

It appeared that there was no definite decision, though some interests intimated that sheets and strip, wire and bars are likely to be increased, with no change in pipe, plates, shapes or tin plate.

Meanwhile, as an evidence of the general strength in iron and steel markets, scrap continued to rise. At Chicago most trades were up 50 cents, to a parity with Pittsburgh.

Iron and steel shipments gave further indications of a pronounced bulge late this month and in December, possibly to reach the year's high point next month.

Detroit Is Leader.

Steel-works operations rose 2½ points to 54½ per cent, with Pittsburgh up 2 points to 46 per cent; Chicago, 4 to 61; Cleveland, 3 to 80; Youngstown, 3 to 56; Detroit, 6 to 94. Declines were noted only at Wheeling, down 6 to 78, and Birmingham, off 11½ to 46½, with other districts unchanged. This week the Thanksgiving holiday may cause some temporary recession.

Sheet-mill operating average has increased several points to 70 per cent, and producers are sold up for the rest of the year on automotive sheets. For the present, automobile manufacturers are not attempting to speed schedules, output last week increasing only 2,000 units, to 95,600. Pressure for delivery of material, however, is strong, and orders have already been placed for sheets, strip, and other steel products for enrollment as soon as mill books are opened.

Reports of an impending increase of $3 a ton on rails, though lacking verification have led to larger purchases, 43,600 tons of rails and fastenings being booked last week, including 20,000 tons of rails and 13,600 tons of fastenings for Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and 10,000 tons of rails for Southern Railway. Pennsylvania Railroad is inquiring for 16,000 car wheels, and St. Louis & San Francisco has asked for court consent to spend $1,800,000 for rails and accessories.

President Willard Sets B. & O. Record

Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, becomes today the railroad's chief executive with the longest tenure of office. This distinction was formerly held by John W. Garrett, Civil War president of the B. & O., whose administration lasted from November 17, 1858, to September 26, 1884, or 25 years, 10 months and 9 days.

Mr. Willard's length of service equaled that record yesterday, since he was made the B. & O.'s president January 15, 1910. At the meeting of the road's board of directors last week, in New York, he was re-elected president for his twenty-seventh term.

Mr. Willard has spent more than 56 years in continuous, active service, starting as a track laborer on the Central Vermont Railroad near his home town of North Hartland, Vt. During the succeeding 30 years he was employed consecutively by the old Connecticut and Passumpsic River Railroad, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, the Soo Lines, the Erie and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, advancing step by step until invited to become president of the B. & O.

The Market

Stock Prices Continued Advance But Did Not Keep Pace With Favorable Developments.

New York, Nov. 24.—Advances in stock prices were not commensurate with the rate of activity, and last week's developments, mostly of a favorable nature, had the effect of holding the market's gains rather than of adding to them. As usual with a bull market, some stock groups came forward when others dropped back and speculative play in the favorites of the moment attracted attention with swift movements; but people who had stocks were more willing to sell them than they recently have been. As was the case when prices gave way the trading volume declined, which the financial community regards as a sign that the time has not yet come for a decline of consequence.

Ticker Inadequate.

Trading activity rose, on one day to around 4,000,000 shares, and the daily average was high, with stock exchange reporting facilities proving quite inadequate much of the time. In spite of the fact that the week brought but a small further rise in brokers' loans and that professional speculators on the floor of the stock exchange are doing much of the trading, it is hard not to think that the public is taking a large interest in the market. Doubtless, it still is buying a good deal with its own cash, and the currency disturbances abroad brought a fresh flight of foreign money into our markets; but the mere fact that the market bait is tempting is beginning to attract the attention of those responsible for credit control, particularly as regards speculation.

Economic War.

Assurances come from Washington that credit expansion is to be encouranged rather than stopped, but merely the fact that the matter is worth thinking about shows how great has been the change in the position within recent months. Fundamentally the foreign developments of the week were not bullish on long term view. This week the application of economic embargoes on Italian exports and imports and on financial transactions of nearly every kind, went into effect among most European nations. This country did its part with notice served by the State Department of great displeasure with the increasing shipments of products—mostly oil, cotton, copper, trucks and the like—going directly or indirectly to Italy.

Embargo a War Gesture.

Whatever the merits of the Italian war may be embargoes are a form of war and a form especially designed to hurt all sides concerned. European trade curtailment with Italy will do nothing to help us, and any effective effort to shut off our exports to Italy will do us harm. However, it is difficult to see how a policy of mere exhortation can jam the flow of trade, and, furthermore, the ban against imports should be put along with that on exports. Producers here are entitled to sell their wares to any buyer not an enemy of this country.

Flighty Capital.

Doubtless on the merits of our trade improvement and that of Great Britain capital would come to London and New York anyhow for investment and safety, but nevertheless if this time France should be compelled to devalue the franc some economic and monetary readjustments would have to be made. If the matter could be done while the situation was well under control, no great disturbance might follow, but, generally speaking, the forcing downward of a currency has a deflationary effect on trade and prices. We may gain more funds if the franc loses the fight, but a depreciated franc will mean greater competition in trade. Whether it will precipitate a general upset of currencies or will hasten the day of all-around stabilization remains to be seen.

On the capital side, this country now has more short-term funds than it needs; a greater surplus may stimulate speculation for a while, as does the sight of the huge gold imports, but capital can be retained only on the basis of larger company earnings and confidence in the dollar. Our monetary policy is still undeclared, and taxation is more than ever a menace to prosperity.

The Price of Copper.

Wall Street hears talk in market quarters of an early impending advance in the price of copper, but a little inquiry in producing quarters develops that such rumors are deprecated by leaders of the industry. Some even go so far as to say they would "resist" an effort to increase the price at this time, indicating that they do not believe in artificial boosts but that consumers must force the price up by their buying. Demand for copper is slack just now, sales this month to date being far under the volume for last month. However, a pickup is exected shortly, probably early next month, it is said.

Tobacco Stocks.

A Wall Street commentator says that an analysis of tobacco preferred and common stocks shows that prices have not recovered from the lows of 1932 and 1933 in a parallel line with the rise in the price of the commodity itself and that had investors in tobacco securities in 1932 bought the actual tobacco instead of the tobacco stocks the accruing profit would have been one-third larger than it actually has been. The trouble with the securities, of course, has been the difficulty in maintaining retail prices of tobacco products.

Yule Trade Will Need Half-Million Extras

New York, Nov. 24 (AP).—Retail stores throughout the country will employ half a million extra workers for the Christmas shopping trade of November and December, the National Retail Dry Goods Association reported today. Compensation of the group will reach $32,000,000, the association estimated. Present indications were that retail stores will have furnished employment for 196,000 extra workers by the end of November, and that 371,000 additional employes would be put to work during December. Estimates indicate that the 1935 Yuletide dollar volume will exceed that of 1934 by 10 to 15 per cent, and that the Christmas retail business will total $4,500,000,000.

General Motors Leads in Sales, Ford in Gains

Chrysler Ranks Second in Increase, Third in 9 Months' Sales.

New York, Nov. 24.—New passenger automobile sales in the United States in the first nine months totaled 2,138,063 units, an increase of 36.6 per cent over the corresponding period in 1934 when the total was 1,564,690, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. Of the three major companies, Ford showed the greatest increase, 48.7 per cent, while Chrysler reported a rise of 38.5 per cent and General Motors 28.6 per cent. Sales of the "Big Three" represented 91.8 per cent of the total sales in the first three quarters of the year. A year ago, the figure was 91.2 per cent.

Although Ford's gain over last year was greater than that made by either of the other two major companies General Motors still held first place as the leading manufacturer. General Motors sold 787,000 passenger cars during the first nine months of 1935, Ford sold 678,000 and Chrysler 98,000.

New Shopping Service Is Boon To Busy Buyer

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IF YOUR SHOPPING worries hang with the weight of a millstone 'round your shoulders, then why not lighten their weight by turning to a certain personal shopping service that's brand new in Washington?

Whatever you want in the way of dresses, coats, sweaters, accessories, unique gifts, rare pictures, books, silver, china, glass, furniture and house decorations, in other words, whatever you want, just give the bureau a buzz about it. They'll streak out with the rapidity of lightning, do your shopping for you, and have the purchases delivered at your door, C. O. D. And you don't pay them a thing! (You see, they realize a small commission from the shops themselves.)

With Christmas coming on, and no end of people to shop for, and simply dozens and dozens of gifts to buy, to say nothing of your regular shopping, you're bound to realize what a boon this personal shopping service can be.

Boon for Busy People.

And those of you who work all day and are forced to snatch time for shopping during lunch hour or else elbow your way through the crowd on Saturday, will undoubtedly find the Personal Service's telephone number a boon beyond compare.

Lots of time, too, you want something that you don't feel like shopping all over town to look for. It might be a doorstop in the shape of a cat, or a maid's uniform that's extra large. Thanks to this service, you can save your steps by merely calling up and letting someone else do the work—with no charge to you!

Aladdin rubbed his lamp to summon his genii. All we do is call a certain number and there's our genii named Personal Service.

Belts Liven Dresses.

AMONG the things that the style spotlight has focused on this season are belts. We have needed belts for sweaters, belts for coats, belts, and more belts.

A word to the wise is sufficient, so listen: In a certain downtown store there's a belt department where you are sure to find the type you want and pay very little for it. As a matter of fact, they are showing a group, including belts, for 59 cents and $1. You should see them. Some dressy and jewel trimmed. Others plain and tailored. Some in bright colors to liven up a frock or coat. Others in brown, black, dark green, and blue. Some in shiny leathers, some dull. There are belts with ornate buckles, belts with plain buckles. You should see the variety, and the really excellent belts for low prices.

Facial Compact Newest.

ONE OF OUR leading beauty specialists may be depended on to greet the season with some new and appropriate gift suggestion. This season's Christmas piece is one of her most thrilling. It's a genuine black leather case, square, and lightweight, ideal for carrying alone, or packing into your large suitcase.

It contains everything for a complete facial treatment. There's a large mirror, and a pad of cleansing tissues, eye shadow, lipstick, muscle oil, make-up film, hand lotion, tissue cream, cleansing cream, rouge and face powder.

Copperware Is Displayed.

It's virtually impossible to resist the genuine copperware displayed in a downtown store. It comes in round, deep bowls for fruit, in attractive vases for winter greenery, in ash trays, pitchers and such a variety of other things.

It's ten to one you'll want it for yourself, but you're sure to see it's a splendid answer to the question, "What shall I give for Christmas?"

Strictly Speaking

Find the Errors.

1. "Tom is considered a very unique person."
2. "The old man preferred to live in lonely isolation."
3. "His praise was scarcely meant to be taken too literally."

Check Here.

1. There are no degrees in uniqueness. The sentence should read, "Tom is considered a unique person."
2. Since isolation means loneness, the word lonely is superfluous. "The old man preferred to live in isolation."
3. Too literally is "more literally than was meant." This gives an idea obviously contradictory to the one the writer had in mind. Too should be omitted. "His praise was scarcely meant to be taken literally."

Can Formal Dress Be Worn to Theater on Thursday Nights, Man Asks.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: We have very good theater tickets in the orchestra section at the National Theater and wonder if it is correct to dress formal on Thursday night. I know that on Saturday the majority of persons "dress" but I do not know if it is permissible to do so during the week. I would very much appreciate an early reply. Yours very truly, EDDIE.

Pointers on Dress.

DEAR EDDIE: I suppose by "formal dress" you mean dinner gown for a lady and dinner coat, sometimes described as "Tuxedo" but more commonly referred to as "black tie," for her escort. If so, it is purely discretionary with theater-goers as to what nights of the week such dress shall be worn. There is no reason why such attire should be reserved for either Thursday or Saturday nights, and not worn on other evenings. It could be worn with good taste any evening of the week, from Sunday to Saturday inclusive but usually predominates during the early run of a play which is commanding the interest of fashionable society. However, as fashionable attendance dwindles, the majority of the audience wherever seated will be found in ordinary daytime street clothes.

• • • •

Strictly speaking, formal winter season dress for a man means tail coat, white tie, opera or high silk hat and white kid gloves, and for a woman decollete evening gown worn with as luxurious an evening wrap as her means will provide. But couples who dressed thus simply to see the play would be overdressing and confessing a lack of better social opportunity for disporting their evening wardrobes. When such attire is seen at the theater, it means—or should mean—that the wearers have dropped in after a formal dinner or are going on to a ball or other formal party later.

• • • •

Dinner wear today for a woman usually means instep or floor length gown, usually with long sleeves, frequently high at the throat, often with ensemble jacket and matching wisp of a hat. When she is so gowned her escort wears "black tie." He may wear such attire to the theater, as I have said; as well as at most dinners, at all informal parties, and when dining at home or in a restaurant. But to the opera, to evening weddings (such as are fashionable in the South), at a dinner to which invitations are worded in the third person; to a ball or formal evening entertainment he properly wears full dress, or tail coat. M. H.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

William Jennings Bryan—Mary Baird.

While a college student, William Jennings Bryan met Mary Baird, then a boarding school pupil. They were married four years later. Mrs. Bryan, who studied law while rearing a family, was a constant inspiration to her husband throughout his career.

These photographs taken about a half century ago at the time of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Bryan are published by courtesy of their daughter, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, Minister to Denmark, who discovered them on a recent visit to Lincoln, Nebr.

A Campus Reception Started the Romance That Bloomed for 41 Years; Mary Baird, Like Her Husband, Was a Full Fledged Lawyer.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

"I TRUST no angry words will ever pass between us and nothing must ever be allowed to shake our confidence in each other. If we keep no secrets from each other, we cannot wander far from the right path."

These words were written by a young lawyer on the eve of his marriage to a young girl he had met during his college days and with whom a campus romance had ripened into a love affair. The pledge of mutual trust which passed between them then was never violated during their long life together.

Through shadow and sunshine, from obscurity to fame, the love between William Jennings Bryan and his wife, Mary Baird, never faltered. To the end, their friends often noticed that when they were sitting quietly together, listening to music or a speaker, their hands would be clasped.

The recent visit to Washington of their daughter, United States Minister to Denmark Ruth Bryan Owen, has revived memories of one of the most picturesque romances in the history of American statesmen. Washington, which knew Mrs. Bryan as the gracious hostess of the Bryan household at Calumet place, will recall her charms, her intellectual attainments and her wide grasp of current events. In every sense of the word she was an ideal helpmeet for her distinguished husband.

Of Virginia Ancestry.

The life-story of William Jennings Bryan is well known. It is a tale of a man born in a small town in the Middle West just before the Civil War, whose parents, in comfortable though not affluent circumstances, were able to give him a good education, Christian training, and a groundwork in ideals. Furthermore, he was endowed with a master gift of oratory and a golden tongue apt in phrase-making. These qualities with an inherent love of politics, wrote Bryan's name in large letters on the scroll of American history.

The roots of Bryan's family tree in America were near Sperryville, Va., where the first of his American ancestors, William Bryan, settled in colonial times. This early Bryan was of Scotch-Irish lineage. William's son, John, grandfather of William Jennings Bryan, went to Point Pleasant in what is now West Virginia where he passed his boyhood. Later he married Nancy Lillard, member of an English family, and lived in Culpeper County, Va.

Their son, Silas Lillard Bryan, father of William Jennings Bryan, attended an Illinois college and after he began the practice of law settled in Salem in that State. Silas Lillard Bryan married Mariah Elizabeth Jennings, of Kentucky, and English ancestry.

Was Reared Simply.

To this pair was born a son on March 19, 1860, named William Jennings Bryan. He was the fourth of a family of nine.

Bryan's boyhood was typical of the time and the region. He did farm work, engaged in country sports and pastimes, and studied at home with his mother until he was 10 years old. From the local high school he went to Whipple Academy at Illinois College, in Jacksonville. There his interest in elocution and public speaking was developed.

In 1877 he became a freshman, taking the classical course although he declared later in life that mathematics was his favorite study until he took up political economy. He was also studying law and after admission to the bar began his practice in Jacksonville.

While in Illinois college, he attended a reception in 1879 at a boarding school for young ladies. Among the belles to whom he was presented that night was a Miss Mary Baird. Mrs. Bryan told thus of that meeting in after life: "A group of college boys entered the parlors and passed the receiving line. From an adjoining room I watched this row of students. I am sorry not to chronicle a case of love at first sight, but one boy among the number attracted my notice and I asked my companion: 'Who is the tall boy with dark hair and eyes?' and when she replied 'Will Bryan' I knew he must be the youth of whom I had been hearing. Our families had known of each other through mutual friends, but had never met."

A College Courtship.

Often when the boarding school girls were out for their daily promenade young William Jennings Bryan would find an errand in the same direction. He asked permission to call on Miss Baird and by the next spring they were engaged. They did not marry for four years as he was getting established in the law and she was completing her education. They corresponded regularly when apart and at one approaching Yuletide we find young Bryan pondering what to give the best beloved for Christmas.

He wrote to her: "How much did you say a gold thimble costs, and what size do you wear? If I have the money I will get you one for Christmas. That statement 'if I have the money' does not sound very well, but I do not hide even my poverty from you." "He always earned the money with which he bought gifts for me," commented Mrs. Bryan. He wound his letter up thus: "So you have learned to make waffles. I am so fond of them."

Love In a Cottage.

We can imagine him enjoying the waffles a little later when he called at his fiancee's home. In the autumn of 1884 they were married and set up housekeeping in a small home in Jacksonville.

In 1887 they went to Lincoln, Nebr., where Mrs. Bryan, in addition to the care of her baby girl, now Madame Minister to Denmark, studied for the bar and passed her examinations, the only woman in her class, and ranking third in a class of 17.

Bryan's foot was now firmly on the ladder of fame. His oratory and political ability sent him to Washington as Representative from his State. Then came the years he ran for the presidency—Mrs. Bryan ever a faithful and loyal supporter at his side—his days in Washington again as Wilson's Secretary of State, then years of peace and happiness in Florida, reading, writing and preparing for the last big battle of his life, that for the faith of his father's Christian fundamentalism, in the Dayton (Tenn.) court room during the Scopes trial.

The trial over, Mr. and Mrs. Bryan were at the home of friends in Dayton when he died suddenly in his sleep on July 26, 1925.

Mrs. Bryan survived her husband by some years, serene in the abiding belief, in her own words "that somewhere just beyond our mortal vision his firm unfaltering faith had been justified to him and that beyond the reach of sorrow and pain, our Christian soldier was marching on."

Many Desserts Of Mince Meat Are Tempting

By Dorothea Duncan.

THOUGH MINCE MEAT is one of America's most popular winter desserts, it is frequently shelved after the Thanksgiving festivities and not brought to light again until the Christmas or New Year's dinner.

Many women associating mince meat only with pie overlook the important fact that this delicate filling is also the basis for many other delectable desserts. Delicious miniature tarts filled with mince meat make afternoon tea a really festive occasion. Mince meat sticks made with brown sugar and oatmeal, served still warm, make an ideal luncheon dessert or a successful after-bridge refreshment and, allowed to become cold, can be tucked into the school box-lunch.

A fruit cobbler, so popular in the season of fresh fruit, can be equally successful during the winter using in place of the fresh fruit a liberal supply of sweet, spicy mince meat. This dessert, as suggested in today's dinner menu, is especially appropriate after the vegetable meal. The recipe follows:

Make the cobbler regular upside-down fashion. Melt ¾ cup brown sugar and 2 tablespoons of butter in a baking dish. Then add 1½ cups of canned mince meat and top this mixture with one recipe of rich biscuit dough improved with two tablespoons of sugar. The regular biscuit dough recipe will be one which calls for 2 cups of sifted flour, 4 tablespoons of shortening, ½ teaspoon of salt, 4 teaspoons of baking powder and enough milk to hold the ingredients together. Bake the cobbler in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) for 25 minutes and serve it warm with brandy hard-sauce.

Fearlessness Of Children Is Social Asset

Age Acts as Balance, but Parents Should Not Be Drags.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

NO DOUBT the parents of the person who discovered fire were frightened at the thought of its danger. They called it an innovation which would lead to no good. And the discoverer of iron was also frowned on. These boys had always been restless and hard to manage and now were likely to upset the established routine with their new-fangled notions.

Parents are naturally conservative. To them the new and untried are dangerous, and they look with anxiety and disapproval on the experiments of the young. Yet they themselves, could they but remember the past, were once full of enterprise, and in their turn distressed their parents by starting out on new and apparently perilous adventures.

There is no use trying to hold them back. To scold and fuss at children for seeking adventure may make them hide their tracks, but they will go anyway. The parents who have not understood and have tried to stand in the way, will find themselves of no importance in their children's lives. They may be loved and given lip-service, but their power to help and advise will be gone. Those parents who have managed to hold their children back probably will rue it all their lives.

It is natural for youth to be headstrong, and for middle-age, which is more experienced, to be cautious. But progress has come from curiosity, enterprise, experiment, even when it resulted in catastrophe. Without the fearlessness of youth to strike out along new and untried paths, the world might still be in a savage state.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IT'S ONE THING to crab—as we often do—about what a nuisance and a disturbance to a pretty room it is to set up a folding bridge ensemble every time somebody takes a notion to play cards. And quite another to make a permanent bridge ensemble become an integral decorative part of the room. But it can be done.

Even a folding table looks all right if it is placed pleasantly in the room . . . in front of a wide window or in a corner of its own. Between bridge rounds, keep a lovely crystal ball vase filled with flowers . . . or put a bright pottery tea set on the table.

Or other types of table and chairs can be used. Windsor chairs or lyre back Duncan Phyfe chairs for instance and a pedestal table. A Chippendale card table would be pretty too with ribbon back Chippendale chairs. A modern table with tubular metal chairs will appeal to the contemporary souls among us.

The wood of the bridge set might be the same as the other furniture in the room, or it might be finished to contrast. We've seen some very effective card tables and chairs finished in antiqued white for rooms furnished otherwise in mahogany. Or for less formal rooms, brighter jaunty colors could be used.

Gleanings from Current Verse

November.

THIS IS THE hour of swiftly falling fruit
Like yellow comets plunging to their doom.
When waking winds retune their rusting flute
And flaming maples stab the gathering gloom.
In tides of music now the roses' petals
Drift in a bright battalion down the street,
And like a gloden mist from copper kettles
This is the hour when blue is more than blue
And scarlet more than scarlet; at each turn
Some flower's fire, full-masted, swings in view;
With blinding eyes I watch it flare and burn.
Earth shouts with color, winds leap in a riot;
How strange it is my heart grows suddenly quiet!

DANIEL WHITEHEAD HICKY.

From the current issue of Good Housekeeping.

Autumn Wars.

NOW SHALL THE heart reject what the mind beholds
And attest with words of breath against the sky;
Finding the shrunken hollows where a starling scolds,
Watching the tawny willow darken and die.
The strangely quiet mind with a deeper sorrow
Hears the sound of footsteps in the hills,
Feels the breaking moments, the plunging tomorrow,
Yields in meadows where specter sunlight spills.
The fretted heart that tippled the swinging stars
And called itself a god with sanguine sight
Will not resolve itself nor cease its wars
When the final cricket jars the heavy night.
Always the mind shall pity the heart in pain
Which generations of death can not dispel;
For it knows that the changing heart will not retain
What the wiser mind has stored in every cell.

ROBERT TROY HERRIDGE.

NOW, HAVING LEFT cities behind me, turned Away forever from the strange, gregarious
Huddling of men by stones, I find those various Great towns I knew fused into one, burned
Together in the fire of my despising.
And I recall of them only those things
Irrevelant to cities; murmurings
Of rain and wind; moons setting and suns rising.

There was a church spire on a distant hill
Clamorous with birds by day and stars by night,
Devout and singing. I have forgot its site—
Boston, or Rochester, or Louisville—
Of a certain city all I can remember
Is wild ducks flying southward in November.

ON A NIGHT when fireflies come
Glimmering up a wooded hill,

To the heartbreak of a bird.

Stomach 'Wise' In 'Acting Up,' Doctor Holds

Act Is Usually Safeguard Against Dangerous, or Too Much Food.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

ORDINARILY the sympton of vomiting can be disregarded. It is frequently an indication that the stomach is exercising better judgment than its possessor. Food that is poisonous, toxic, or indigestible may be eaten. When it reaches the stomach that organ, sensible of the insult, refuses to give room to the offending material. Again, vomiting may take place whenever we attempt to load the stomach beyond its capacity, and it will follow the drinking of too much water, particulary if the water is warm or tepid.

At the beginning of acute disease, accompanied by fever, vomiting may be one of the prominent symptoms, particularly in children The onset of infections is often accompanied by a general disturbance of the nervous system, so much so that the stomach will reject its contents, not because the material is improper but because digestive processes have stopped—a most sensible procedure.

Ulcers a Cause.

Naturally, if there is any obstruction along the digestive pathway vomiting will occur. This is particularly true in newborn infants in whom there is a constriction of the stomach outlet. In adults, ulcers may lead to the formation of scars at the stomach exit, causing a stagnation of food and hence vomiting. Whenever irritation exists in the gastric pouch—inflammation, ulcers, etc.—there may be reverse contractions of the stomach.

In most circumstances about all that is vomited is food, gastric juice, and mucus. In chronic gastritis, morning nausea is sometimes a fairly constant symptom and may be accompanied by the explusion of two or three teacupsful of thick, glairy mucus.

Blood Sign of Danger.

We can look upon most cases of vomiting as inconesquential, provided the symptom does not reappear with any degree of frequency and is not accompanied by blood. Blood coming from the stomach is of considerable significance, as indicating an ulcer somewhere along the upper portion of the digestive tract.

Should a patient vomit blood there are several simple procedures that may be adopted before the physician arrives. The most important is to place the patient in bed and keep him absolutely quiet. It is usually wise to elevate the foot of the bed. Nothing should be given by mouth, not even a teaspoonful of water or a bit of cracked ice. If the hemorrhage has been severe and the hemoglobin and red cells have dropped to low levels, a transfusion should be considered. We must not assume that immediate surgical intervention is always desirable. Most patients will progress to safe recovery under conservative medical management.

Yes, the stomach is "wise!"

Slayer of Killeen Suffers Breakdown; State Holds Jealousy Caused Killing

Self-Defense Claims Are Ridiculed by the Prosecutor.

Clews Are Sought To Wilson's Death

Widow Orders Casket for Gambler's Rites Tomorrow.

The boldness that marked Lillian Callahan Maddock, 36, when she took a drink and called the police and her lawyer Saturday after killing Edward V. (Eddie) Killeen, erstwhile gambling czar, had vanished yesterday.

So badly was her system shattered after a two-day whisky orgy with Killeen that a physician, after examining her in the Rockville Jail, ordered that she be given a two-ounce drink every three hours until she has tapered off.

State's Attorney James H. Pugh of Montgomery County indicated he will fight a plea that the woman, a former peddler of narcotics, killed Killeen in self-defense.

"Killed For Love."

Yesterday he quoted her as saying:

"I killed him because I loved him."

Pugh will attempt to prove that Mrs. Maddock flew into a rage when Killeen threatened to leave her and go to Miami, Fla., on his cabin cruiser.

Mrs. Maddock now is charged with murder, which is not bailable. Her attorneys, however, plan to argue that she killed Killen after he had beaten her and threatened to shoot her, and that consequently she should be charged only with manslaughter. Then she could be released on bond.

If the charge is to be changed, it will be done after an inquest or a preliminary hearing in court.

Body Given Undertaker.

The body of Killeen, drilled by two bullets which Mrs. Maddock fired at him during a brawl Saturday in his "second home" on Conduit road, was released to the undertaker late yesterday.

It will be clothed in a tuxedo and placed in a copper casket.

Mrs. Florence Killeen, the gambler's widow, told the W. W. Chambers undertaking firm that she wanted her husband "to have the best in death as he had in life."

The funeral, to be held tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. from the Chambers funeral home at Fourteenth and Chapin streets northwest, will be private, with only a few relatives and friends in attendance.

A Catholic priest will conduct the services there and at Mount Olivet Cemetery, where the body of Killeen will be buried in the family plot.

Killeen is known to have made a tremendous sum of money in the course of his long career as a handbook and "numbers" gambler here, but, according to those who knew him, spent it almost as fast as it came in.

His tangible assets at the time of his death were his Conduit road home and the more pretentious house on Chesapeake street in which Mrs. Killeen lives. Then, too, there is the 45-foot cabin cruiser, on which Killeen spent most of his time in the summer months.

Pugh announced he and Washington detectives investigating the Wilson murder case will talk to Mrs. Maddock this afternoon.

Suspected in Plot.

Killeen was suspected of having hired professional killers to murder Edward (Mickey) McDonald, a local gambler. The killers made a mistake and killed Allen Wilson, a newspaper route agent, who was delivering a morning paper at the McDonald home.

Pugh said last night:

"I don't think we will ever be able to tie Killeen up with the Wilson case. In investigating Killeen's death, however, we may be able to uncover valuable clews in the Wilson murder."

The detectives, who, with Pugh, will talk with Mrs. Maddock this afternoon are members of the so-called Wilson squad. They are Lieut. John Fowler, Lieut. Floyd Truscott and Sergt. Earl Hartman.

Retirement Denied.

Pugh said that, contrary to the general belief, Killeen had not retired as a gambler. There is evidence, he said, that the one-time "big shot" was operating on a modest scale in Montgomery County.

The State's attorney said he had the names of seven or eight men who are believed to have been "operators" for Killeen. He will try to question these men.

Washington police scoffed at the idea of a battle among local gamblers to take over Killeen's "empire" here. They scoffed because Killeen, according to their information, had long since withdrawn from the local field.

Pugh said that, from an inspection of the Killeen house on Conduit road, he believed the one-time "big shot" might have been getting ready to start operations on a large scale.

A room on the third floor, he said, had been so prepared that between 20 and 30 telephones could be installed. These might have been used for receiving bets on the races.

After Killeen was killed, police took from the house a valuable collection of gambling paraphernalia—roulette wheels, dice cages and chuck-a-luck layouts. Mrs. Maddock told them Killeen recently brought this collection from a hiding place at Smiths Creek, Md.

The suggestion that Mrs. Maddock, in killing Killeen, was the agent for rival gamblers was laughed away by investigators yesterday.

Expert Hits Careless Driver In Auto Crash Survey Here

Dr. H. C. Dickinson Names Major Causes of Traffic Fatalities.

For 30 years Dr. H. C. Dickinson, National Bureau of Standards safety expert, has been studying ways of reducing traffic deaths. Washington, with one of the highest auto death rates in the country, has been one of his laboratories.

Last night Dr. Dickinson put most of the blame on two categories of motorist—the driver who cuts in and out of traffic and the "thoughtless" autoist.

Violations Listed.

Passing stop lights, 9 per cent.

Dr. Dickinson believes that drivers may learn the "art" of safe motoring just as boxers improve with training and practice. That, he said, was the hope of such safety conferences as the one suggested by President Roosevelt last week, rather than formulation of static regulations which do not consider that automobiles are dynamic, moving things.

Definitions Given.

Dr. Dickinson said that by finding out the ratio of chances that drivers take it was possible to "guess" that approximately the same ratio of safety violations was involved in accidents. He said the distribution depended on how various risks were classified and gave the following definitions:

"Too fast: Safe speed depends upon the ability to make normal or safe stops in case of necessity at crossings, on curves, on hilltops or under any conditions where the view is obstructed, or in any place where other vehicles or pedestrians can get in the way. The driver who exceeds a speed which would permit him to stop in case of any unforeseen emergency of this kind, will eventually have a collision.

"Cutting in: Orderly traffic requires that each vehicle stay within its own traffic lane or change only when this can be done without crowding other vehicles.

"Making dangerous turns: Every intersection involves interference between vehicles in different traffic lanes. The only safe way to cross an intersection or make a turn is this: Approach at such a speed that one can stop safely if another vehicle should appear from behind any obstruction near the crossing.

Man Who Jumped Bail in Md. Caught

Frank Prowd, 37, was being held in Stamford, Conn., last night accused of jumping a $5,000 bond posted for him when he was arraigned in Capitol Heights, Md., two years ago on a charge of embezzling $12,000 from the Stembler & Ford firm of lumber dealers in Capitol Heights, the Associated Press reported.

The woman who allegedly posted his bond also was under arrest. Her name was given by the Stamford chief of police, John B. Brennan, as Mrs. Janice Carson, Clow.

Prowd, it was recalled by Justice of the Peace Oscar Poore, in Capitol Heights last night, was a bookkeeper for the lumber company and as such had charge of payment of all accounts.

Poore said the man had pleaded not guilty to the embezzlement charge and was held for the action of the grand jury when arraigned before him. Chief Brennan was reported by the Associated Press as naming Mrs. Clow as the woman who posted the bond.

100th Birthday Of First Train Here Observed

New York Group Marks Centenary With Ceremony at Union Station.

The New York Chapter of the Railway and Locomotive Historical Society came to Washington yesterday to commemorate the centennial of the entrance of the first railroad into the Capital.

At a brief ceremony at Union Station 65 members of the organization presented a wreath in memory of the first station here and a rare portrait of Horatio Allen, first locomotive engineer in America. The portrait will hang in the Smithsonian Institution.

In presenting the wreath to G. Murray Campbell, assistant general freight agent of the Baltimore & Ohio, W. J. Coughtry, vice chairman of the chapter, said:

"We take great pleasure in commemorating a notable event in railroad history—the entrance of the iron horse into the National Capital. Arriving as we did on a high-speed, streamlined train, this ceremony commemorates not only history but progress."

Coughtry, in presenting the portrait of Horatio Allen to the Smithsonian, told how Allen operated the first locomotive over the tracks of the Delaware & Hudson, August 8, 1829. It will be placed on Allen's locomotive, the "Stourbridge Lion," at the Smithsonian.

Three Killed In Accidents; D.C. Toll 102

District Resident Dead in Hospital; Many Are Injured Here.

Three persons were killed in traffic accidents yesterday. Two of them, a colored man and woman, perished in a head-on collision on the Washington-Baltimore highway near Beltsville, Md. The third, also colored, made Washington's death toll 102.

Those killed in the Maryland crash were Ernest E. Scott, 28, and Mrs. Florence J. Madden, 30, both of Baltimore. Five other persons, passengers in the two cars were hurt.

Richard Good, 488 L street southwest, died shortly after arrival in Emergency Hospital after being struck at Seventh and Water streets southwest by an automobile driven, police reported, by Joseph Click, 28, 1123 New Jersey avenue southeast. Click was released in custody of his attorney for a coroner's inquest.

Hospital physicians said Good died of a fractured skull. His death brings Washington's traffic toll to 102 for this year.

Policeman Hurt

Policeman Guy L. Carder, 32, of the Second Precinct, was treated at Garfield Hospital for shock and head bruises after he was thrown from a police patrol wagon in a collision at Thirteenth and U streets northwest.

The patrol was driven by Officer B. D. Wood and was struck by a car driven by Thurmond G. Hager, 4311 Twelfth street northwest. Hager was not held. Police said the patrol wagon was badly damaged.

Clarence Gray, colored, 28, 1736 Seaton street northwest, suffered a cut lip and body bruises when he was struck at Twenty-ninth and K streets northwest by a car reportedly driven by Policeman James G. Austin, of the First Precinct.

Gray was taken to Emergency Hospital by Austin, who said the man ran into the path of his car against a red light. Austin was off duty at the time.

Treated for Head Cuts.

James C. Shartzer, 27, 4222 Seventh street northwest, was treated at Casualty Hospital for head cuts in an accident on Benning road at Boons Hill, Md.

Pearl Compton, 21, of Cherrydale, Va., was brought to Georgetown Hospital from an accident on the Leesburg pike near Tyson's Corner, Va. She remained in the hospital.

Henry J. Aiellow, 52, of 613 Thirteenth street northwest, suffered a fractured ankle when the taxi in which he was riding collided with a car driven by Wallace B. Sullivan, 29, of Salisbury, Md., at the corner of Third street and Constitution avenue northwest, yesterday. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Tuberculosis Tests Will Start Today

The greatest effort in Washington history to ferret out the tuberculosis disease gets under way today, with 10,000 persons scheduled to take free X-ray examinations from the Health Department during the next two weeks.

Two months of preliminary campaigning by all local medical groups resulted in the registration of more than 10,000 persons, white and colored, for the tests, Health Department officials asserted last night. Some of them will have to be turned away. The $99,000 allotment from the Works Progress Administration, through which the mass screening is being financed, permits only 10,000 tests.

From 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. tests will be given daily, the apparatus permitting two persons a minute to be X-rayed. Today and tomorrow at Central High School tests will be given to white women, while men's tests will be given there Wednesday. Colored women will be X-rayed at Garnett-Patterson Junior High School on December 2, 3 and 5, and colored men on December 4 and 6.

Roosevelt Aids Drive Against Tuberculosis

Health Menace to Young Cited in Urging Support of Christmas Seals.

Tuberculosis is "the Nation's foremost public health problem—especially among the young," President Franklin D. Roosevelt asserted yesterday.

He urged the Nation to support the sale of Christmas seals to raise funds for the fight against the disease. His White House statement follws:

"On Thanksgiving Day will again be launched throughout the country the annual Christmas seal sale of the National Tuberculosis Association for funds with which to continue the fight against tuberculosis. The appeal deserves the serious consideration of everyone, for the disease continues to be the Nation's foremost public health problem—especially among the young. It is imperative that protective measures which have been found effective in preventing further spread of the disease shall be continued unabated.

"Leadership in the work of carrying out these protective measures is given by the National Tuberculosis Association and its 2,000 affiliated units throughout the country. Their work has been of special value during the past five years, when Federal, State and municipal administrations were extended to the limit in caring for those who turned to them for aid.

"The co-operation of every man woman and child, every organized group and every governmental official is needed in order to bring this dread disease under control. It is properly the duty of each local community to raise the funds for its own protection. Christmas seals give everyone an opprtunity to do his part. The funds are spent in the communities in which they are raised for the protection of all. The need is great."

Group to Receive Cup.

The cup awarded for the best civic float in the Halloween parade will be formerly presented to the Southeast Citizens Association at Hine Junior High School tomorrow night by Vernis Absher, chairman of its civic committee. It will be received by President William A. Maio.

Good Morning

Many a man, severely plain in his tastes for street clothes, chuckles as he indulges himself in a suit of gayly colored pajamas. The wife or friend who anticipates this weakness by a cleverly selected Christmas gift, goes down in the man's history as a person of extraordinarily good taste.

American Nations Join Here in Noting 100th Anniversary.

Washington, in which stand several buildings donated by the philanthropist, today joins cities throughout the United States and the British Dominions in observing the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Andrew Carnegie.

At a special meeting of the Pan American Union governing board this noon, Secretary of State Cordell Hull will speak in commemoration of the steel magnate's many services in behalf of peace among the American states. Speeches will be made also by Ambassador Felipe A. Espil of Argentina, board vice chairman and other diplomats and Government officials.

Carnegie Libraries Here.

Washington's public libraries, four of which were erected with Carnegie funds, will also mark the day. Yesterday special displays of books by and about the steel magnate and benefactor were placed in the several libraries, along with large portraits distributed by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. These exhibits will be shown throughout this week.

Formal observances are scheduled also in New York, Pittsburgh, at The Hague, Holland, and in Dunfermline, Scotland, where the success story of Andrew Carnegie had its humble beginning and where stands the first of the hundreds of libraries made possible through Carnegie gifts.

Washington libraries built by Carnegie funds include the Main library at New York avenue and K street and the Takoma Park, Southeastern and Mount Pleasant branches.

Church Group Inspects Alley Homes in Tour

Ihlder Urges Each Section of City to Care for Slum Dwellers.

John Ihlder, executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority, charged with the task of getting rid of Washington's 200 inhabited alleys, yesterday called upon every section of the city to take care of the housing needs of its entire permanent population.

"There are elements or groups in certain sections that would like to redevelop those areas into apartment houses, he told 35 members of the Congregational Youth Council.

"This would mean moving a considerable population to other sections of the city. The Alley Dwelling Authority believes each section should take care of its own population."

Tour Slum Area.

"An alley is a thoroughfare, public or private, less than 30 feet wide, or that does not open in its full width directly upon a public street."

"It is the hidden community we have got to get rid of," Ihlder said. "This situation has existed 70 years and more, and not very much has been done about it. However, there have been no new houses—at least legally—built in an elley since 1892."

D. C. Schools Reach Peak Enrollment

Gain in Pupils Falls Short of Estimate; Need for Buildings Cited.

What is usually the peak period for number of students in Washington's public schools in the winter season here, and the predictions—and fears—of school officials have not been completely realized.

There are 93,000 students in the teachers' colleges, high schools, elementary schools and vocatoinal schools operated by the District government, a check revealed yesterday. This is an increase of, roughly, 2,000 above last year.

It did not reach the 3,000 student increase that Robert S. Anderson, then school statistician, estimated just before the school year opened in September.

Congestion Increases.

School officials were not sure whether this meant that the peak, usually in mid-November, might be delayed this year for some unknown reason, or whether it meant that the pace was slackening. In any event, the increase represented another increase in congestion, notably in the higher schools.

The exact enrollment, on November 14, totaled 93,082 students, the exact increase above the comparable 1934 date, November 8, being 1,727. The major increase came in the senior high schools, where enrollment was up 776, and in the junior high, up 754, and both of these, for both white and colored schools, were scattered through every section of the city.

From the flimsy typewritten sheets in the Franklin Administration Building on which these changes are recorded, a picture of Washington's changing population can be drawn. A shift of residents toward the Eastern hills, particularly to the Northeast, is evidenced in those figures.

PWA Project Adds Pupils.

Into the slow and gradual shifts certain unpredictable factors confront school officials. One is the new Public Works Administration housing project on which construction will begin within a few weeks in the vicinity of Benning road and Twenty-first street northeast.

PWA housing officials, through Director Angelo R. Clas, last week advised the Board of Education that this project would add some 300 colored children of elementary school age to the population of the far Northeast area and urged immediate provision of new school facilities. The project is to be completed by December, 1936.

Seconding this, the chairman of the Washington committe on housing, Clarence Phelps Dodge, asked the board to seek an item in the first deficiency bill, usually introduced in Congress early in January, to build an eight-room annex to the Young Platoon School, at Benning road and Twenty-first street northeast. This would make possible the construction of the annex by the end of next year.

Princeton, Minnesota, T. C. U. Share National Grid Leadership

S. M. U. Seen Past Peak, Crippled

By Alan Gould
Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—There's no difficulty whatever today in identifying the three outstanding unbeaten teams in college football. Reading from East to Southwest, on the basis of their latest and most dynamic performances, they are Princeton's Tigers, Minnesota's Gophers and Texas Christian's Horned Frogs.

Sharing yesterday's spotlight with Stanford, which shattered California's Rose Bowl hopes with a 13-to-0 victory before 90,000 onlookers at Palo Alto, all three powerhouses turned on their strongest touchdown current.

Princeton, in a November blizzard, knocked Dartmouth from the unbeaten class with a 26-to-6 plastering. Minnesota finished its second straight undefeated and untied session by blasting Wisconsin, 33 to 7. Texas Christian scaled the heights of an astonishing campaign by routing the strong Rice Institute team, 27 to 6.

T. C. U. May Get Bid.

Since neither Princeton nor Minnesota will consider any postseason activity, the latest swing in football fortunes forecasts possibility of Stanford and Texas Christian being paired for the classic Rose Bowl game New Year's Day. This is contingent, however, upon the ability of T. C. U. to dispose of Southern Methodist in the battle for the Southwest Conference title next Saturday and then take the measure of Santa Clara at San Francisco December 7.

Southern Methodist, like T. C. U., completed its tenth successive game yesterday and therefore ranks with the few unbeaten-untied season survivors, along with New York University. There appears no doubt however, that the celebrated "pony express" has passed the peak of a spectacular season and faces the climax badly crippled.

It took a brilliant last-period come-back, led by the elusive Bobby Wilson, to give Southern Methodist a 10-0 victory over the Baylor Bears. It was another costly triumph for the "Pony Express." One of the team's star guards, N. C. (Iron Man) Wetzel, was added to a casualty list that already includes the great fullback, Harry Shuford. The prospects are consequently none too good for this week's decisive struggle with Texas Christian, but Southern Methodist can't be counted out in advance.

Also Risks Elimination.

New York University, entertaining hopes of an invitation to the Sugar Bowl game at New Orleans if not to Pasadena, also risks elimination this week. The Violets, no longer blushing from a de-emphasis program, play their foremost metropolitan rival, Fordham, Thanksgiving Day. This game shares the week's climax interest along the Eastern front with the annual Army-Navy game at Philadelphia and Princeton's attack on Yale, both slated for Saturday.

Along the snow-swept Atlantic seaboard yesterday, major developments included Yale's stirring victory over plucky Harvard, 14 to 7, at Cambridge; Temple's unexpected downfall at the hands of Villanova, in a brilliant battle, 21 to 14, and Duke's triumph over North Carolina State, 7 to 0, to clinch the Southern Conference championship.

Temple, which had knocked Marquette from the unbeaten class the week before, was a top-heavy favorite to dispose of its last Eastern rival and entertain another bid to the sugar bowl, but Pop Warner's Owls were unable to check Villanova's passing spurt in the last half.

Dazzling Exhibition.

Princeton, on a snow-blanketed gridiron before a crowd of 58,000 that packed Palmer Stadium for the battle of unbeaten "Ivy League" rivals, gave a dazzling exhibition of scoring power under adverse conditions.

So furious was the Tiger defense, after its first few lapses, that Dartmouth showed a net gain of barely 15 yards from scrimmage for the entire game. Yale scouts went away with scant prospect of making any suggestion likely to help the Elis stop this Princeton juggernaut next Saturday at New Haven.

The Big Ten closed its season with a smashing series of games. Minnesota, the only unbeaten ma-

Griffith Shifts Marion, Rookie, to Albany Club

John (Red) Marion, an outfield prospect discovered two years ago by Clark Griffith and who has been developing on the Old Fox's Washington and Chattanooga clubs since, has been optioned to the Albany Club of the International League. Marion, who is 20, played briefly with the Nats last season, then was shipped back to Chattanooga for further seasoning.

"Marion is a very good prospect, and I wouldn't lose him for anything," Griffith stated yesterday in announcing the switch. "He is a promising fielder, but is not clicking right at the bat just yet. We are stepping him up to a slightly faster league to help his development."

Grid Situation At a Glance

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 24.—Here's the national college football situation in brief:

East—Princeton, by beating Dartmouth, rated outstanding team favorite to clinch "Ivy League" title in annual game with Yale Saturday. New York University, only other unbeaten and untied team, faces Fordham Thanksgiving Day.

Middle West—Minnesota, only major unbeaten and untied team, shares Big Ten championship with Ohio State. Nebraska already holder of Big Six title.

South—Duke clinched Southern Conference championship by beating North Carolina State. Louisiana State, leader in Southeastern group, plays Tulane Saturday.

Southwest—Texas Christian and Southern Methodist, both unbeaten and untied in ten games, meet Saturday to decide championship.

Far West—Stanford's victory over California, previously unbeaten, produced triple tie for Pacific Coast title, involving two and U. C. L. A. Stanford now the favorite for Rose Bowl. Colorado knocked out of Rocky Mountain Conference lead by Wyoming.

Coast to Pick Bowl Team Today

By the Associated Press.

PASADENA, Calif., Nov. 24.—Stanford's football team for the third consecutive year appeared today to be knocking at Rose Bowl portals.

While the victory for Coach Claude (Tiny) Thornhill's eleven threw the rose tournament situation on the Pacific Coast into a turmoil with three teams tied for the conference championship, the chances were strong that Stanford would get the call.

Graduate Manager Alfred R. Masters of Stanford said "I feel that Stanford's decisive victory over California entitles it to the invitation to represent the West."

Graduate Manager W. W. Monahan, of California, thought California still deserved "utmost consideration," but would be glad to abide by whatever choice is made. He reiterated his belief that California played "the most representative schedule" but assured that it gladly would "leave it up to the conference."

The problem will be unraveled tomorrow when the votes from the ten members of the conference are counted at Los Angeles. Since the conference does not pick a champion, the method of selecting will depend entirely on the ideas of each institution with the result that Stanford and California probably will battle it out.

Defeated by U. C. L. A.

Stanford's advantage came from the fact that its defeat at the hands of the University of California at Los Angeles early in the season was directly the result of the work of Ted Key, Bruin full back, who later was declared ineligible. Key scored the touchdown and kicked the goal that beat the Indians, 7 to 6.

The Bruins have lost only one conference game, but the ineligibility of Key was expected to backfire on them in the voting, leaving California and Stanford the chief contenders.

The problem of selecting an invading opponent was also difficult. Minnesota and Princeton, definitely the class in the East and Middlewest because of unbeaten records, are not available.

New York University and Holy Cross remained in the picture in the East with one game each to be played. New York tackles a tough opponent in Fordham while the Holy Cross faces its traditional rival, Boston College.

The possibility of a Southwestern team making the trip still was seen, with Texas Christian and Southern Methodist classed among the unbeaten. This probably may be half solved Saturday when they meet.

The South was without an unbeaten team. North Carolina continued to set the pace with its setback by Duke its lone blemish. Alabama, aside from its tie with Howard in the opening game and a defeat by Mississippi State, also had a chance to come back.

Bears Gain Tie With Detroit, 20 to 20

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Nov. 24.—With Bill Karr on the receiving end of three touchdown passes, the Chicago Bears battled the Detroit Lions to a 20-20 tie on Wrigley Field today after the visitors had taken the lead three times in a National League pro football encounter.

The tie, the first of the season for them, left the Bears tied in the Western Division with the Chicago Cardinals and Detroit, a full game back of the Green Bay Packers.

With Bill Shepherd and Dutch Clark sharing the passing and running duties, the Lions scored first, although a 62-yard touchdown run on a punt return by Beattie Feathers was called back on a holding penalty soon after the opening kick-off.

Aerial Nets Score.

From midfield, at the end of the quarter, Clark passed to Caddell for a 12-yard gain, and on the first play in the second stanza, Caddell sent an aerial to Klewicki for 36 yards and a touchdown. Clark's boot was blocked.

The 14,624 fans then saw the Bears swing into action. On the next kick-off Nagurski returned the ball to his 31, and then hit the line. With the help of two passes in this advance, one for 20 and another for 26, the Bears counted and Manders converted. Shortly afterward Ronzani intercepted a Detroit pass and ran it back 36 yards to the 7. He passed to Karr for a touchdown, but his placekick was not good and the score was tied.

Hitting the line in two threats against the Bears in the third period gave the Lions their last touchdown, Shepherd going across after a 15-yard penalty on the bears had put the Lions on the 1-yard line. Clark kicked goal.

A pass, Masterson to Karr, good for 41 yards, gave the Bears the tying score when Christensen punted out after Chicago lost the ball on downs on the 10-yard line. Manders' placekick was good—and went clear over the park wall.

Presnell was injured on the third Detroit touchdown play and had to leave the game.

New Women's Billiard Record Set in Chicago

Chicago, Nov. 24 (AP).—Hilda Stowell, of Chicago, tonight won a 50-to-22 decision over Daisy Jordan, of Minneapolis, in the first game of the women's national pocket billiard championship tournament, running out in 31 innings.

Cochrane Says Deal For Simmons Far Off

Miami Beach, Fla., Nov. 24 (U.P.).—Manager Mickey Cochrane of Detroit's world champion Tigers is in the market for likely-looking prospects for the Detroit outfield.

The deal for Outfielder Al Simmons, slugger of the Chicago White Sox, still is far from in the bag, Cochrane admitted.

Kipke Out?

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 24 (AP).—The Ohio State Journal said tonight it had learned "on good authority" that Harry Kipke "may be through as football coach" at the University of Michigan.

If a housecleaning at Michigan is undertaken, the journal said, it may sweep out the entire gridiron staff except Athletic Director Fielding H. Yost. The newspaper did not name the source of its information.

Bohn, Aid to Nazi Refugees, Urges U. S. Quit XI Olympiad

ANOTHER log was thrown on the fire of Olympic controversy yesterday when Dr. Frank Bohn, national chairman of the emergency committee in aid of refugees from Naxism, in his first conference here emphasized his opposition to America's participation in next year's Berlin Olympic games. Dr. Bohn is a son-in-law of Secretary of Commerce Daniel Calhoun Roper.

It is the purpose of the committee to raise $250.000 to aid the host of political refugees from Germany.

"Let there be no dishonest compromise on the Olympic games," Dr. Bohn said. "We might as well hold these games in the area Mussolini has conquered from Ethiopia, among the rotting bodies of the slain, as in Berlin."

"Everything in the news," continued Dr. Bohn, "indicates that the German Nazis are running amuck. The best defense of the terrorized German people will come through the aroused moral indignation of the great English-speaking peoples."

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 24.—Deploring what he termed "the Hitler government's establishment of paganism as a state religion," Father Charles E. Coughlin today broke his previous policy of silence on the controversy raging throughout the country over participation in the Olympic games at Berlin next year.

The radio priest in a statement made to his parishioners at the Shrine of the Little Flower in Royal Oak, a suburb of this city, said he took it for granted American athletes would not be anxious to participate while Germany remained unfair to all religions but the one it had established for its own.

Giants Defeat Philadelphia By 10 to 0

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—A 55-yard touchdown pass caught by Tod Goodwin and an 18-yard field goal kicked by Harry Newman gave the New York Giants a 10-to-0 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles today in a national pro football league game played at the Polo Grounds.

The game was played in biting cold and on a gooey gridiron. Although they did not score their touchdown until the last minute of the third quarter and Newman's three-pointer was not made until midway through the final period, the Giants, fighting to protect their thin lead in the league's Eastern division, outplayed and outfought the Eagles throughout the game.

Both sides risked few running plays in the first half and went in for kicking in a big way. Swede Hanson of the Eagles outshone Ken Strong and Ed Donawski in this feature. The Quaker, in the first period, booted the mud-encrusted and soggy ball 70 yards. The ball bobbled out on the Giants' 5. Strong, however, kicked it back 65 yards.

Before the Giant machine finally clicked and ground out points, Strong missed two field goal attempts. In the second period, after a 32-yard drive propelled by Danowski and Kink Richards, Strong tried one from the 27-yard line and missed. In the next period his bid from 40 yards was blocked by Ed Manske.

The Giants' touchdown got underway on their own 40. Danowski flipped a short pass to Goodwin for a 5-yard gain and then he tossed the ball again to Goodwin, who caught it dangerously close to the side boundary on the Eagles' 35 and then raced across the goal. Strong converted.

Newman earned the three-pointer from placement almost single-handedly. Mel Hein speared a Quaker pass on the Eagles' 30 and then Newman advanced the ball in three turns around left end to the 12. He dropped back 6 yards and kicked the field goal. The victory put the Giants a full game ahead of the Brooklyn Dodgers in the Eastern race. The Giants and Dodgers meet in Brooklyn Thanksgiving Day.

Maryland A. C. Tops Pros, 9 to 0, for Title

THE undefeated Maryland A. C. continued its winning ways by whipping the Washington Pros, 9 to 0, in a game for the District Professional Football championship at Griffith Stadium yesterday.

A crowd of some 1,500 braved the chill winds of the ball park to watch the two local aggregations battle bitterly for more than half an hour and finally settle the issue in the third period.

A touchdown, scored on a pass from Dick Nelson to Jim Forney, really decided the argument, although a safety just a few moments before had given the ultimate winners a two-point lead.

The first points were acquired by Maryland when a 55-yard punt by Dick Nelson rolled to the Pros' 4-yard marker. Bomba dropped back to put his team out of danger, but as his foot connected with the ball, Willis Benner broke through the line and inserted his person directly in front of the ball. The ball bounced into the end zone for the safety.

Immediately after the kick-off, Nelson flipped the ball 30 yards to Benner, who was dumped on the Pros' 21. Gene Augusterfer shot off tackle to the 14, then Nelson rifled the telling forward pass to Forney, who snared the ovoid on the 6 and dragged himself across the goal line despite the efforts of Earl Dunlap and Don Bomba to deter his progress.

Benner converted from placement for the final score. Opportunity knocked for the Pros in the third, as a Benner fumble was recovered by the other side on Maryland's 20, but the Marylanders halted the threat and then punted out of danger.

D. C. Elevens Face Stern Rivals

C. U. Plays N. C. State; G. W. Meets Nodaks, G. U., West. Md.

LOCAL college football aggregations will have opportunity to wind up the 1935 season in a burst of glory this week during which four pretty important games are scheduled hereabouts.

Maryland will tackle Syracuse at Baltimore, Thanksgiving Day Catholic University will make passes at North Carolina State at Griffith Stadium, and George Washington will engage North Dakota in Central High Stadium. Georgetown will play Western Maryland in Baltimore Saturday.

The tussle between Maryland and the Orange probably will devolve into a more or less personal contest between Bill Guckeyson, the Terps' star backfield performer, who scored an almost single-handed victory over Georgetown last Saturday, and Vannie Albanese, who shines just as brightly behind the Syracuse line.

To Be at Top Strength.

Syracuse was undefeated until it collided with its ancient and honorable enemies from Colgate. Maryland, although fairly successful all season, did not live up to preseason promise until its somewhat unexpected victory over Georgetown. Maryland will be represented by its full strength and the Orange will send a squad of 47 from Syracuse, arriving in Baltimore early the day before the game, allowing time for a workout.

Catholic University will be facing the major test of one of its most successful seasons against the Wolf Pack Thursday. The Cardinals, beaten only by DePaul, have not yet reached the peak close observers believe they are capable of reaching.

Must Reach Peak.

Against North Carolina State, they must reach that peak. They must show more than a spark of greatness if they are to have any chance at all against the aggregation that held Duke to only one touchdown the week after the Blue Devils had whitewashed, shellacked and otherwise mistreated a North Carolina team that had previously been undefeated.

George Mulligan, generally conceded to be the best end ever at Catholic University and a selection for the Little All-America team, will be playing his last game for the Cardinals against State.

George Washington may be in for the game of its life against the Nodaks, although the Dakotans were beaten, 13 to 7, by Western Maryland last Saturday. Because of severe weather in their native bailiwick, the Nodaks had not worked out of doors for three weeks preceding their losing stand against the Green Terrors and they showed it on the field.

First Defeat of Year.

With that tough game, which incidentally, was their first defeat of the current season, under their belts, the Sioux may be in fine fettle for George Wasington.

Georgetown, too, will have its hands full against Western Maryland Saturday.

Against North Dakota, the Green Terrors, especially one Green Terror—Cliff Lathrop—showed just about all the fire and dash that was theirs in the happy days when Dick Harlow was chief football mentor at Westminster.

The Hilltoppers may be just a bit tired after their gruelling grind with Maryland and, if such is the case, may find the Terrors too much. Western Maryland's first team is a very good team, indeed. What has been hampering the Westminster boys all season is a lack of suitable substitutes. Against North Dakota the first-string players needed no understudies. Against Georgetown they may.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

I AM an average guy with my share of curiosity so, naturally, when I hear the sum of $2,000,000 being bandied about in talk of a revival of racing at the old Benning track, why, I am intrigued. In case you don't know it, 2,000,000 slugs is a considerable sum for a face-lifting job on the old race plant and any guy with such grandiose ideas must be whattaman indeed, and that is exactly what I discovered.

POVICH.

This fellow, Walter E. O'Hara, from up Boston way is quite a potent package, it seems. He parlayed a clump of brushwood at Pawtucket, R. I., into the summer horse racing capital of the Nation within two years; is rated a millionaire as he turns the youngish age of 40; has surrounded himself with the best brains that money can hire, and incorporates in his ideas about as much waste motion as you'll find in a dynamite cap. He's the man who is visualizing the Benning track as the show place of the turf world.

Up there in his local hotel suite yesterday I saw three gentlemen, each of whom I suspected successively as being the man who had two million to spend on an idea that the Benning track was worth the investment—important looking gentlemen who looked like ready money, only to discover that they were his underling, his architect, the trainer of his personal stable of horses, and an employe high in his confidence. I figured the boss man must be a big shot, indeed, every inch a capitalist.

The fellow in his shirt sleeves whom I had quite overlooked was my man, the brains of the outfit. With a disarming smile and a hail-fellow expression on his ruddy face, he introduced himself as O'Hara and you kinda knew he was a right guy. Yes, he said, he figured there'd be newspapermen around looking for the lowdown on a $2,000,000 proposition. Used to be one himself.

IT SEEMS his salary as a sports reporter for the Boston Globe fell considerably short of his estimates of a wage commensurate with his ideas, and he struck out in business in an effort to meet expenses which, with him, were always high. Anyway, the O'Hara family would not lack for representation in journalism. Brother Neal O'Hara was then the famed columnist of the New York World, the first of the sports humorists. With the end of the World, Neal O'Hara became one of the most widely syndicated of all columnists.

From Boston, Walter O'Hara gravitated to New Bedford, Conn., the whaling city that gave Frankie Britt to the prize ring, and found himself engaged in the cotton mill business, which he found very profitable, indeed. Until a few years ago, he was only a casual race goer but when he deemed the time propitious for the legalization of racing in Rhode Island he was quite captivated by the prospect of a track in Pawtucket.

Out of his dreams of becoming a turf impresario rose the beautiful Narragansett track, completed in fewer than 45 days after the first spade had been turned. The guy has a knack of getting things done quickly. In its first season of racing, where racing had not been known before, Narragansett forged to the top of the Nation's tracks in point of attendance, amount wagered, its appeal to horsemen and in profits. By the end of its second season, Narragansett had paid for itself, property values round about were startlingly increased and O'Hara was turning down offers of 500 per cent on his investment.

Firm in the belief that money begets money, O'Hara introduced the $1,000 purse for overnight races in Narragansett. With Maryland operating on a basis of $600 and $700 purses, New York offering only $800 and the Western tracks rarely giving $1,000, Narragansett soon became the center of racing in the United States.

HE WAS saying that he will make no political football out of his Benning idea. If Congress votes for racing, well and good. If not, O'Hara says, well, that's okay, too. He doesn't want racing in a spot where it's not wanted, but he does take time to point out that Rhode Island, the smallest State in the Union, this year profited to the extent of $1,250,000 in revenue from his Narragansett plant, which he believes is doing very well by the State, and, in that form, the people.

As I was saying, O'Hara has surrounded himself with brains that his bank roll permits him to hire. With him currently, awaiting word to start, is Architect Mark Lilienthal, whose Narragansett plant is the last word in customer and horsemen's appeal.

At O'Hara's side in his projected Benning enterprise is Harry Stringer, former Washington newspaper executive and Capital correspondent, who is the staff upon which O'Hara leans in his every decision. Stringer did not come into racing as a novitiate. His dad was the owner of an elaborate stable and Stringer was teethed on a horseshoe.

O'Hara strikes you as a guy who loves to put on a show. And it's not difficult to believe him when he says that, with him, Benning will be no coldly commercial racing plant. He wants a show place there. He wants a Saddle Club; he wants to make it pleasing to the eye and comfortable for the customers. He wants a National Capital Handicap for a $50,000 stake as befits racing in the Nation's Capital. He's got ideas.

T. C. U. Nation's Best, Says Princeton Center

New York, Nov. 24 (AP).—During a lull in the snow-clad Princeton-Dartmouth football game, Steve Cullinan, sensational Tiger center, sauntered over to one of the officials to unburden himself of something he had apparently been thinking about between tackles.

Tapping G. H. Lowe, the umpire, Cullinan said: "Say, do you know who's the best football team in the country?"

Without waiting for the somewhat nonplussed official to invite an answer, Cullinan continued: "It's Texas Christian. I come from that part of the country and I know they are plenty good."

Cullinan's home is Tulsa, Okla.

Says It Was Odd Sharkey Asked That Fight Go On

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—It would certainly be a fine thing for boxing in other cities if their boxing commissioners had the same sensible nostrils and considerable knowledge of the psychology of the knockout as have the commissioners in the fair city of Boston, where recently old squire Sharkey elected to begin what is technically known as a comeback on the person of one Unknown Winston. Because exactly two seconds after Sharkey had knocked out Winston with what seemed to be a violent scrape on the chin with the back of his hand, Referee Johnny Martin was walking around the ring with his face and nose screwed up as if something smelled bad to him, and in another few seconds he was saying so.

He rendered a dictum that made the sad-looking colored man a double loser. He first counted him out and then he disqualified him for not trying, which is a polite way of saying in Boston that the party of the second part is a phony. He announced that in his opinion Sharkey had tried, but inasmuch as the other man had not, it was no contest. This This meant that Winston's purse was confiscated by the State. All this happened in one minute and ten seconds after the fight had started before a packed house. A part of that house got right up on its hind legs, came down to the ringside and began to call names.

It is a slightly uncomfortable feeling to be on the inner fringe of a mob of potential rioters. Master Sharkey was sitting calmly in his corner, his white-blue eyes shining, a towel thrown over his shoulders.

WINSTON was still reeling and writhing and twisting and contorting in his corner, apparently trying to act like a man who has been knocked out would act, which, of course, nobody can really do convincingly because one doesn't know what one is going to do when one comes out of a coma.

The spectators refused to budge. They stood and yelled the foul names that a fight crowd can yell when it is mad, women or no women. Officials wandered around the ring and held consultations. The colored man was getting tired of prolonging the coming-out-of-the-ether act. Then Fat Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's business agent, whose face always wears what seems to be a permanent mask of injured innocence, went over to Dan Kelly, the Boxing Commissioner and football referee, and said that Sharkey was willing to do it all over again and was asking the commission to let the fight start anew.

I think in New York State Gen. Phelan, commission chairman, would have had apoplexy at such a suggestion, but Kelly said sure, go ahead and fight again—that will be swell. You will never find a Kelly standing in the way of anybody who wants to fight.

THEY went over and told the big Ethiopian that he was going to get another chance to get knocked out respectably. Nobody asked him whether he cared to fight another fight. He was just told that he was to. His handlers said he couldn't because they had cut his gloves from his hands with shears and the laces were shredded, but he was told to sit quietly and recuperate some more until they got a new pair of mittens.

What seemed to me a little more strange about the whole business was that the offer to give the customers another fight, making two for the price of one, came from the party who had been adjudged innocent of wrongdoing, Jack Sharkey. It wasn't his money that would be taken away. Somehow, there is something just a little confusing in the fact that Sharkey should suggest fighting again whereas, by rights, the request should have come from Winston, whose money it was that was being taken away from him.

Kennon 7th; Is First D.C. Finisher

By George Considine.

BUCKING a cold head wind, 19-year-old Buster Logan, of Newark, N. J., beat out a crack field of 55 cyclists yesterday on the Ellipse roadway to win the pre-Olympic marathon, which featured the National Capital Bicycle Sweepstakes. His time for the 52½-mile grind was 3 hours 6 minutes and 40 seconds.

In the hardy group of 13 survivors, Bob Kennon, District champion, was the first Washington man to cross the finish line. The 18-year-old member of the Century Road Club placed seventh. Other local finishers were Billy Cauffman, Bits Horner and Wilden Heinerd, who came in tenth, eleven and twelfth, respectively.

Second to Logan by the margin of a wheel was Charlie Grill, of Somerville, N. J.; then, 15 yards back, the bunched field, the order of finish being Otto Sorbini, of New York; Paul Nixon, of Union City, N. J.; Charlie Velo, of Somerville, N. J.; Dan Esposita, of Newark, N. J.; Bob Kennon, Mario D'Alessandro, of Philadelphia; Joe Henry, of New York; Billy Cauffman, Bits Horner, Wilden Heinerd and Caesar Percudini, of New York.

Ed Bieber, former District champion, who was favored to win when it was announced that National Champion Cecil Hursey would not compete, was forced to retire from the field because of a punctured tire after 65 laps. The intense cold and the rough track combined to wreak havoc on the aspirants for next year's Olympic team.

Shorten Distances.

At the 45-mile mark the judges, seeing that dusk was fast closing in on the riders, shortened the ultimate mileage from the scheduled 62½ miles to 52½. It was at that point that Buster Logan tucked his head down into his handlebars and "gave 'er the gun."

Sprinting as though he had come fresh from the showers instead of the most back-breaking, rib-straining display of superstamina, these jaded eyes have ever witnessed, Logan belied his tender years by whirling around the Ellipse with a dizzying pace. The field wasn't licked yet, however, for it stuck right on his back tire.

Logan whizzed across. Close behind was a group of four, any one of whom might have been runner-up. It was that close. Grill, Sorbini, Nixon and Velo just like that. Esposita next and then District Champion, Kennon, the latter only a minute and a half behind the winner. At 2-yard intervals came D'Alessandro, Henry, Cauffman, Horner, Heinerd and Percudini.

Sets Early Pace.

After setting a blistering pace in the 6-mile Women's International race Joan Ward, second-ranking Canadian cyclist, dropped back, to finish third behind the cool, mechanical proficiency of Lois Albey and Doris Kopsky, both of the Belleville (N. J.) Bicycle Club. Miss Albey's time was 19 minutes 57 2-5 seconds.

Jean Karp, the first Washington girl to finish, was fourth, while Frieda Szuchy, Philadelphia champion, and Ella Brinkman, of New York, brought up the rear to annex fifth and sixth places, respectively.

The prerace favorite, Marjorie Ward, champion of Canada, was the lone casualty of the day. After trailing the field for 9 laps, Miss Ward, obviously in great pain from the cold and exhaustion, wavered. An oversolicitous official dashed out on the track, sought to stop her and, in his haste, knocked her from her wheel, causing her right arm to be painfully wrenched.

Couple of Touchdowns Given Md. A. C. by Feds

"I'm in a terrible pother," announced an angry voice quickly identified as belonging to Ray Smythe, proprietor of the Washington Federals Professional Football Team.

"What's bothering you?" queried the telephone answerer.

"These Maryland A. C. guys claiming to be the professional champs of the District is what has me waxing wroth," averred Smythe. My Federals are the champions. We won the title from the Mohawks last year and until somebody beats us, we're still champs."

"I should like to challenge the Marylands to a game for the title—and we'll spot 'em two touchdowns."

High School Highlights . . .

By John R. Vosburgh.

WHAT Central failed twice to do and Tech once, namely, beat one of Virginia's foremost high school football teams, now devolves upon Devitt Prep and Adam Zinkievich. In selecting Devitt as the school to represent Washington against Thomas Jefferson High, Richmond's champions, the Richmond American Legion picked what is probably the strongest team of the Capital area.

Now, that is saying a lot in view of Central's 7-to-6 defeat of Devitt. But any of the high school coaches, such as Artie Boyd and Hardy Pearce, who have scrimmaged their teams against Devitt will vouch for the power of this prep school team.

When Central nosed out Coach Jim McNamara's forces, Zinkievich was in Worcester, Mass. And as Zinkievich goes, so goes Devitt, which is no reflection on the rest of the Devitt team. In fact, the players admit it. Zinkievich, a 175-pound 6-footer, undoubtedly is the finest all-around backfield man to wear a school uniform in or around Washington in a long, long time.

That is not solely the opinion of this observer or of such high school coaches as have seen him in action. McNamera, one of Lou Little's scouts for Columbia, widely asserts it. When Devitt meets Thomas Jefferson in Richmond Stadium Saturday, December 7, Zinkievich in particular and the Devitt team in general will provide the Richmonders an eyeful of football.

Resuming the All-High team discussion possibly won't get anybody anywhere, but there are a few words further to be said on the subject. It seems our All-High article yesterday was necessarily abbreviated due to lack of space.

Hence, we were unable to explain our selection of the backfield. Billy Richardson and Johnny Jones of Central at halfback and Francis Crimmins of Tech at fullback need little explanation. Jack Shugrue of Eastern, got the call for quarterback, for one reason, largely because it was he who gained about 120 of the 135 yards Eastern gained against Central's interhigh champs.

Shugrue was the only man able to score a touchdown against the champions. He quarterbacked Eastern wisely and well. He threw two flawless passes to Russ Kidwell to beat Tech. And both plays were the essence of good quarterbacking. The first pass which took Eastern to the 16-yard line on a 20-yard gain he called cooly on first down. The second was a duplication of the same play when it was fourth down and 9 to go on the 15-yard line.

Fraters Bow To Clancys, 29 to 0

By the Associated Press.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 24.—The powerful Norfolk Clancy eleven ran roughshod over the Alexandria Fraters here today, winning 29 to 0. Four touchdowns, a safety and three extra points after touchdowns were scored before a shivering crowd estimated at 2,500.

Clancy backs, led by the smooth-running Andy Beher and the line-plunging Ray Rex, accounted for most of the thrills during the afternoon. Rex, the former North Carolina State star, tallied two touchdowns, while Zeher crossed the final stripe once and added three extra points by placements. Bill Daugherty pushed over a 6-pointer, running 10 yards to score standing up.

Five minutes after the game got under way the Clancy team was in scoring position. Zeher, whose kicking was spectacular all afternoon, boomed an 85-yard punt that ro lled in the end zone after Robinette fumbled momentarily. Then Frater ran the ball back to his 3-yard line and Jeffries got off a punt that was downed on his 25.

Zeher and Rex swung into action. Rex rammed the line for a first down and a lateral, Rex to Zeher, placed the ball on the 1-foot line. Zeher hit right tackle to score and they added the extra point.

Virginia A. C. Team Retains Grid Title

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Nov. 24.—The Virginia A. C. successfully defended its city senior championship this afternoon, defeating the Alexandria Pirates, 20 to 2. Approximately 1,000 fans witnessed the game.

Dr. Albert J. Newlin, of the University of Santa Clara attended the California game yesterday to measure rain, but none fell.

He was retained by an insurance company that guaranteed ticket purchasers, for a 50 cent fee, a $5 payment if one-tenth inch of rain fell in the Stanford Stadium between 11 a. m. and 3 p. m.

Two 0-0 Ties In Capital City Loop

AmericanBeer, Georgetown Boys Deadlocked, but Retain Leads.

AMERICAN BEER and Georgetown Boys Club remained leaders of the 150-pound and 135-pound divisions respectively of the National Capital City Football League yesterday, both by virtue of scoreless ties. American Beer suffered its first tie of the season at the hands of the Cardinals while Virginia Avenue was tightening its hold on second place in the 135-pound division with a 6-to-0 victory over the Centennials.

The teams were deadlocked until late in the third quarter when Dugelman, Virginia Avenue right end snagged a pass with a pretty one-handed catch and ran 20 yards for the winning touchdown.

On the Tidal Basin field, the 130-pound league leaders from Georgetown Boys Club suffered their first tie of the season but still remained unscored upon and unbeaten. Brookland Coal Co. gained the distinction of holding the Northwest team to a tie and twice seriously threatened to win by driving to the Georgetown 10-yard line where it was held for downs.

Guckeyson Ties For Third in Grid Race

Deadlocked With Ellinger and Adamaitis With 30-Point Total.

BILL GUCKEYSON'S spectacular sprints for touchdowns against Georgetown not only made things more interesting in the District scoring race, but also projected the hitherto modest Terrapin star squarely before the public eye. Guckeyson's two touchdowns boosted his total to 30, and placed him in a tie with Ellinger, a teammate, and Adamaitis, of Catholic University, for third place in the race.

Tuffy Leemans held on to second place without moving a muscle, by virtue of his 42 points, and Walter Dick, American University fullback, who hasn't played for a couple of weeks, continued to lead the parade with 66.

Make Bids This Week.

Leemans will make his bid for high-scoring honors Thursday against North Dakota at Central High School stadium, while Guckeyson attempts to boost his mark against Syracuse at Baltimore.

The Parade of the All-Stars of U. S. Colleges

University of Oregon—Its All-Time Honor Roll

By George Trevor.

Nationally Known Football Authority.

AT the head of the scenic Willamette Valley girdled by wooded mountains snuggles the little town of Eugene, home of the University of Oregon. Here in a pioneering environment, dotted with logging camps and fishing canneries, boys grow as tall and rangy as the native yellow pine trees.

Oregon doesn't get as many ready-made prep school stars as do the major California colleges, yet this all-time roster of Web Foot players could hold its own with the best. Some mighty linemen have worn the Lemon Yellow and Emerald Green, notably John Beckett, devastating tackle on Hugo Bezdek's unbeaten 1916 team which conquered Pennsylvania 14 to 0, swamped California and played an epoch scoreless tie with Gill Dobie's Washington steam roller. Beckett was largely responsible for stopping Dobie's dreaded mass on tackle.

Bad Bill Steers, who piloted the 1919 Yellow Typhoon in the Rose Bowl game, was Oregon's neatest broken field weaver. His drop-kicking and hair-raising run-backs of punts featured that 7 to 6 thriller which was won by Harvard on a touchdown against two field goals.

Mohler Wins Ex-Caddies Golf Tourney With Low Net of 72

Two Are Tied For Second With 74s

Dulin, Wannan Trail; Tom Pitt Cards 82 for Low Gross.

By Dave Herman.

ED MOHLER, lithograph company superintendent, won the Brightwood Ex-Caddies Golf championship yesterday at the Beaver Dam Country Club in the twelfth renewal of the only tournament of its kind in the country.

Mohler had a winning low net of 72, fashioned from a gross of 46—44—90 and an 18 handicap.

Jim Dulin, with 89—15—74, and A. Wannan, 86—12—74, both of the Government, tied for second low net, and Jack Waldron, a printer, with 90—15—75, and John Baldwin, who is studying to be a lawyer, with 90—15—74, tied for third low net.

No one in the field broke 80, but 86 remained for Tom Pitt, the hot-water heater salesman, to turn on the heat long enough to score a 42—40—82 and win the low-gross prize.

Harry Pitt Picks Up.

The course was so long and tough yesterday that even Harry (The Moose) Pitt, one of Washington's best golfers, was forced to pick up somewhere along the stretch. John R. Miller, defending champion, and Jess Baggett, two favorites, tallied 85 and 83, respectively.

Mel Shipley, 90-3—87; Harvey Shipley, 88-5—83; Nelson Praxton, 89-9—80; Ed McAleer, 92-112—80; D. Dulin, 107-20—87; Dr. Howard L. Smith, 85-3—82; Harry Bailey, 92-12—80; W. L. O'Brien, 97-12—85 and B. A. Bickerton, 101-15—86.

An entertainment and banquet followed the championship tournament, the boys who caddied on the old Columbia course 25 years ago fraternizing and renewing acquaintances with a number of prominent Columbia members.

Beaver Dam Country Club's powerful 21-man team had little trouble defeating Army and Navy Country Club yesterday at the former's course, winning, 44 to 9.

Cliff Spencer, host profesional, shot a 74, failing to level or break par because of an inauspicious start and a weird finish. Spencer took a 6 on the first hole and a 5 on the eighteenth, going 3 over on the two holes. However, he shot five birdies, the back side in 34, and missed an eagle by half an inch on the eighth hole.

Results:

Beaver Dam (44) vs. Army and Navy (9). Spencer and Miller, 4. Burton and Space, 1; Beach and Mai. Taylor, 4. Sadler and Maj. Taylor, 1; Baggett and Thompson, 5. Hume and Dunning, 0; Stringer and Balfour, 5. Bozart, senior and junior, 2; Morris and H. Bailey, 3. Pearson and Yates, 3. E. Bailey and Sheehy, 4½. Davis and Menzie, ½; Madison and Fleming, 3. L. M. Hedgecock won the turkey tournament at Argyle Country Club yesterday by virtue of his 85-18—67 net. S. F. Sherwood, 86-16—70 and H. W. Wilson, 90-19—71, were other winners of gobblers. Fifty golfers competed in Argyle's final tournament of the year.

F. A. Moulton, with 89-19—70 and J. E. Huntt, 82-12—70, were the winners of the turkey tournament at Indian Spring Country Club. Mrs. J. Franklin Gross, 106-20—86, won top prize in the women's turkey tournament, and Mrs. E. B. Wagner, after tying with Mrs. George Diffenbaugh with a 90 net, won in the draw.

The Wineman Trophy went to Mrs. K. S. Giles, who had 94-86-20—160, Mrs. E. B. Wagner, 99-94-32—161 was second.

Lots of turkeys were won at Congressional Country Club. D. B. Griffin, 108-30—78, won first prize; G. W. Neville, 93-15—78, second and Dr. O. H. Wendt, 91-13—78, third. Other winners: L. H. Paulger, 93-22—71; Earl Chesney, 89-18—71; C. F. Smith, 111-40—71; J. J. Kennedy, 96-24—72; Ted Ralph, 106-34—72, and Noah Pomeroy, 92-20—72.

Totaling the lowest number of strokes, 17 for the sixth, ninth, sixteenth and eighteenth holes, Ralph Gibson captured the turkey tournament at Manor. Gibson won in the draw from H. L. Lacey. R. Wray, with 32 for the four holes, won a prize for the highest number of strokes.

Mrs. Ora Emge, former club champion, won the Bob Marmion Trophy at Beaver Dam, defeating Mrs. R. C. Mitchell, 1 up, in the semifinals and Mrs. N. J. Waldron, 1 up in the final.

Mrs. W. J. LaBille, with a 91, took low gross honors in the women's turkey tournament at Beaver Dam. Mrs. N. J. Waldron, 92—16—76; Mrs. Charles Griffin, 103—24—79, and Mrs. J. T. Money, 115—34—81, were the low net winners in the first flight.

N. T. Young, A. E. Schafer, R. Hambright and H. B. Merchant were the winners in the G. P. O. turney tournament at Manor.

Shaded Raises of Suit Bid.

If your partner opens the bidding and the next opponent passes, remember that your partner may have considerably more than a minimum bid, and try to give him opportunity to rebid and show the full strength of his hand.

A shaded raise, when there has been no intervening bid, requires adequate trump support and a singleton, even without any honor tricks; a doubleton if your hand contains one-half honor trick; one honor trick if your distribution is 4-3-3-3.

Double Raises.

A double raise—that is, a jump raise of your partner's bid from one to three—is a forcing bid. When you give your partner a double raise he cannot pass, but must bid again even though he had only a bare minimum bid.

To give a double raise you need better than adequate trump support—at least four trumps, headed by at least the jack or better, and in addition, two honor tricks if your hand contains a singleton; 2½ honor tricks if your hand contains a doubleton; three honor tricks if your distribution is 4-3-3-3.

When the next opponent has overcalled, slightly more strength should be held.

Playing Percentages.

Expert play of the cards is nothing more than the elimination, as far as possible, of the element of chance. Today's hand is an excellent example of careful play.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

West opened the deuce of hearts which dummy's ace won. A moment's study by declarer revealed that finesses for both black kings offered the best chance for success. If either was right, his contract was safe. But in the event that both were wrong, there was one measure of safety open to him.

Acting on this theory, he stripped the hearts and diamonds from both North and South hands, ending in dummy by the ruff of his third diamond. Now the trump finesse was taken, and West's king won. But, as declarer had hoped, it was blank, and West had the unhappy choice of leading a club up to South's major tenace, or leading a red card that could be ruffed in dummy while South discarded the club queen.

Obviously, South could have dropped the singleton king by a straight lead of the ace, but the odds did not favor this play.

Today's Question.

Question: I bid one diamond, my partner bid one heart, and I bid one spade. Was my second bid forcing?

Answer: No. If you wanted to make a forcing bid, you should have bid two spades. Your partner should rebid, however, with anything short of an absoulte minimum heart response (one-half honor trick).

Learn to Play Popular Music in 20 Lessons With Kitt's Easy Course

This popular instrument has captured the whole country—young and old—from age 6 to 60. Hundreds have finished the course in our school alone. It's the easiest of all instruments to learn to play—average students taking our course can play popular music after only 20 lessons. Why not learn to play yourself. Play for pleasure at home or parties or play for profit—good accordionists are in demand everywhere in orchestras, night clubs, for radio programs, etc. The cost is nominal—$1.50 per weekly lesson pays for BOTH the instrument and a full course of PRIVATE LESSONS. Absolutely no other charge—you merely come in, arrange for the instruction and we give you the accordion (in case) to take home.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — Sympathy for the Eldorados — By Harry J. Tuthill

Yes, it was a surprise.
Reg U S Pat Off. 11-25
Not to me. But you ask why I wasn't surprised? All right, I'll tell you. First...
How Mr. Eldorado, who's always so dignified, slapped Oakdale on the back. And how Oakdale swaggered around while flipping cigarette ashes on my rugs.
First...that tintype of old Hartford, found in the pocket-book, proved...
I know nothing could go wrong with the mind of a man as aristocratic and important as Mr. Eldorado, but...but..
McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.
Oh how I'd love to see the faces of Mr. Eldorado's blue-blooded aunts when he walks in with a new dimlet-eyed nephew for them. The first thing they'll say is, water!

Fight for Hospital Goes to Roosevelt

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Nov. 24. Abandoning all hope of breaking through the regulations of the Works Progress Administration, Delegate Harvey D. Beeler, this county's representative in the West Virginia House of Delegates, and Col. J. A. Procter, of Berkeley Springs, returning here yesterday from Charlestown, W. Va., where for ten days they sought the allocation of $250,000 for a children's hospital here for treatment of infantile paralysis, announced they would carry their fight to the White House.

They said they would go to Washington and ask Senator Rush D. Holt and Representative Jennings Randolph, of this district, to urge the President to make a specific grant for the Children's Hospital. When Senator M. M. Neely returns from the Orient, his assistance also will be solicited.

State to Instruct Raisers of Holly

Maryland Plan Aims to Save Christmas Tree Crop.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Nov. 24.—The State forestry department is helping Maryland farmers who own holly trees to have a merrier Christmas themselves by giving the Santa Claus business a boost.

The plan is to put extra holiday dollars in the farmers' pockets by teaching them how to handle their Christmas tree trade scientifically. It was explained today by F. W. Besley, the State forester.

"In the past," he said, "much valuable Maryland holly has been cut by vandals who killed the trees. They would cut down a whole tree and then trim off the branches. Our plan will keep the tree alive and give the owner of the wood lot a regular Christmas income."

So far as Besley knows, it is the first time just such an undertaking has been launched by any State forestry department.

Apple Mary — By Martha Orr

BILL, I MADE JACK LAIRD SO MAD, I'M AFRAID THERE'S NO USE COUNTING ON HIM FOR ANY HELP IN THE FUTURE.
AS SOON AS DENNIE GETS THE MONEY FROM HIS FATHER'S ESTATE, I'LL PAY JACK THE TEN PER CENT I PROMISED HIM, AND THEN WE'RE THROUGH.
THAT'LL SUIT ME. I NEVER DID LIKE YOUR MIXING WITH THAT CROOK.
FUNNY, I TOLD THE LAWYER I WANTED SOMEONE TO APPRAISE THE PROPERTY, SO I'D KNOW IT'S VALUE, AND HE LOOKED SCARED.
LET ME INVESTIGATE IT, MARY. THAT'S MY MEAT.

On the Air Today

SATURDAY night was a gala occasion for this air observer. That morning a brand new 1936 model receiver had been delivered to the Heiney establishment, equipped with a half-dozen different dials and a row of control knobs which set me to thinking of that first oats box cat-whisker affair I had years ago. And that first set in which a tube was used, a few months later.

Then the old DX days came to mind—when strong men and fascinated youths sat up until 4 in the morning, with phones plastered to their ears, listening for a sign of identification from some station whose signal strength was so weak that music was barely heard. Always, just as the announcer came in for an identification, the airways went gusty and the station call was lost.

It recalled the first time the distinctive voice of Lambdin Kay came faintly and with eerie intonations from Atlanta and Kay's famous station slogan "WSB—the At-lanta Journ-al . . . The Journ-al covers Dixie—like the dew." And those old-time Iowa stations with their barn dances. And the feuds waged by Louisiana's Henderson.

So I decided to see what the airways were like after midnight, with a powerful new receiving set. I expected some definite change—some smart touch to the old informal studio party broadcasts of 1923 and 1924. That is, if the early morning's late programs were being conducted at all without the benefit of "big names" and up-to-the-minute radio technique.

But—after midnight—radio is just the same. WSPA, down at Spartanburg in the Carolinas, and WHO, Des Moines, for example, were conducting request programs identical to those of a decade ago. "Doc" Brinkley's Midwestern station was not on the air, of course, but the "I know all" type of "doctor," who answers all questions for the modest sum of $1, was going strong from the station which uses Eagle Pass, Tex., as a postoffice address—and whose transmitter is located. I believe, across the line in Mexico.

Even more barn-dance programs were noted than in the most flourishing days of Iowa's seed-selling stations. (Remember Henry Field and KFNF, Shenandoah?)

Not the least interesting of the DX hours was the new wrinkle on the "man-in-the-street" idea, pursuing its wobbly way from Chicago on the frequency used by WLS and WENR (the call letters were not given as I listened). The questions a la Belcher and Johnson, and The Post's "Curbstone Queries" and Hittenmark's WRC quarter hour, were being asked in a Chicago nightery with uncertain results. (However, Art Tatem contributed some excellent piano solos as mikes were being changed.)
